By the application of a morsel of science I had practically the monopoly of the distribution of Gerbera Jamesoni for some years, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine. Seeds were difficult to get elsewhere, but I had a fair supply each year, and distributed sometimes as many as fifty plants during the season. The point was this. It is well known in a certain department of botany that the compositæ are very frequently self-sterile, i. e., the pollen is of no effect on the plant that produced it. Pollen must always come from another individual, so that if you have one plant only you cannot obtain seed, while if you have two plants, you can get seed on both. This is to be pointed out, because it applies equally to the hybrids, which, in most cases, are true hybrids as distinguished from crosses, and are perfectly fertile. It is not well-known, perhaps, that cinerarias, for instance, are strictly self-sterile. Even seed growers, I believe, are not always aware of this fact.

NORTHERN TEXAS.

After several days of fine weather with the thermometer at 70 degrees, and when we were congratulating ourselves upon spring being here, we were rudely awakened by the visit of what people here call a "norther," and the mercury traveled towards the bulb at a lively rate, making it very disagreeable and causing fires to be rebuilt. These sudden changes are what make the florist here keep his eyes open, and wonder what is coming next.

Judging from reports of advance orders for spring planting, there will hardly be enough stock home-grown to fill the demand. A large amount of hardy shrubs is being planted and the indications point to an increased demand.

This has been the mildest winter any in this section can remember, but it has been exceedingly wet, keeping the planters out of the field, and in some sections they are not yet through picking cotton. Carnations in some places are looking fine. A few growers have had to cancel standing orders, claiming their stock was off crop. I cannot understand how this can be unless their plants have been pushed too far; the same varieties grown by other growers are in the pink of condition.

Being informed when I first came to this section that growing roses was an impossibility, I have tried experiments with a few and have convinced myself that roses under some conditions can be grown successfully. Mr. Goree, of Whitewright, Tex., for his own amusement and as an amateur has made a success, and Mr. Farley, of Denison, who has a few at his place, is also raising some fair stock. As I have not yet experienced a summer here, I am not yet prepared to say as to the final success of my plan, but am hoping that it will come out all right.

Carnation cuttings are planted out here very early, about the first of April, as it is necessary to get all the growth possible before the hot weather comes. I have been told the weather gets so hot that it shrivels up the leaves on the trees and that the ground bursts open with the intensely hot, dry atmosphere, but when September comes everything commences to grow again and in October and November plants, especially roses, are at their best. What can be grown during the winter season is the question many growers ask, and it will have to unravel itself.

Early blooming flowers are what is wanted; late flowering stock, all right in the north, is too late for this country. Early propagation, early planting and early housing I think will solve the question.

Bulbous stock is about all gone; there are some fine hyacinths, Von Sions and Keizerskroon tulips left, but they will be all gone before Easter. Outdoor stock has passed through the season all right so far and the only fear is now that they are making good growth, a sudden cold snap may come and undo all the work that has been done.

WASHINGTON.

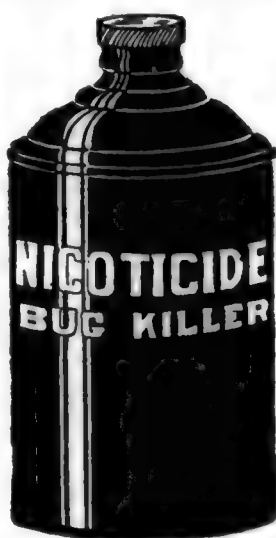

The Market.

Though weather conditions have been unfavorable, business continues good. St. Patrick's day was the best of the week, both for cut flowers and pot plants, including, of course, those pretty little pots of shamrocks. All cut stock is in fair supply, but the finish of the tulips seems near.

Easter prospects are now uppermost in the minds of both growers and retailers and at this time they are good. Visits to the different ranges disclose the fact that large stocks of all plants that are generally designated as Easter plants are on hand and it is reasonable that cut flowers will be plentiful.

Various Notes.

The most notable decorations of the week were for Speaker Cannon's dinner to the Gridiron Club and for the Shriners' banquet, both on the night of March 17. The Cannon dinner was in the elegant banquet hall of the new Willard hotel, which was decorated for the occasion in the style that has made the names of the decorators, J. H. Small & Sons, famous from ocean to ocean. A notable feature was a perfect model of the Capitol. This was placed on the orchestra stand, while a skillful arrangement of various greens extended in front and represented the grounds. An immense quantity of smilax was used to garland the entire hall, the national colors being everywhere prominent. Palms and foliage plants were in every available niche, great bunches of American Beauty roses being the gems worthy of such a setting.

The decoration for the Shriners' banquet was executed by the Gude Bros. Co. in a style that was in keeping with the fine record of the decorators.

A NEW TOLEDO CONCERN.

The Perennial Gardens Co., capital $35,000, was incorporated March 15 at Toledo, O. The names of Chas. K. Friedman, Orion W. Nelson, B. C. Ames, S. M. Lavin and James Austin, Jr., appear in the incorporation papers, but it is understood that other influential stockholders who are not mentioned at this time are interested. The purpose of the company is to establish a first-class nursery for the propagation of hardy plants, perennials, ornamental and fruit trees, and also engage in the importation of nursery stock.

An option on a tract of land south of the city has been secured and within thirty days work will begin on the erection of six or eight large greenhouses as a starter. The promoters are aggressive and practical men.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Two greenhouses, the property of Dexter E. Horton, of South Rehoboth, were destroyed by fire about 4 o'clock on the morning of March 13. In the two houses were 35,000 cabbage plants, 8,000 tomato plants and some new farming implements, which were a total loss. The fire was discovered by the hired man, who roused the neighbors, and through energetic work on their part they were able to prevent the spread of the flames to the other buildings close to the greenhouses. The fire had gained such a start at the time that it was discovered that efforts to get it under control were futile. The two greenhouses were burned to the ground.

The loss sustained is estimated at about $800. No insurance was carried.

EASY WEEDER

THE WEEDER FOR FLORISTS

The inner edge is sharp. Its oval shape permits the operator to weed behind the plants while standing in front. The pushing edge is thin enough to work easily through the soil, but too dull to damage the stems of the plants should it come in contact with them.

It takes out the weeds and leaves the surface smooth. What's more, it does all the work so rapid it will pay for itself in one day's use.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held March 7, President Harrison in the chair. The attendance of members was large, making a record. Five new members were elected to active, and seven nominated to active membership; also two to honorary membership.

The chief business was the drafting of a schedule for the coming fall flower show. It is the earnest endeavor of the society to make this exhibition a thorough success. Some good prizes are already forthcoming. The silver cup, by Mrs. Percy Chubb, has been placed upon carnations, calling for fifty carnations in six standard varieties, arranged for effect. Generous gifts as prizes have also been given by Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, Glen Cove; Weber & Don and Stumpp & Walter Co., New York.

The floral exhibits by members at the meeting were many, diverse and highly interesting, showing throughout superb cultivation. Alexander Mackenzie staged a lovely table containing a vase of mixed carnations, a bunch of Princess of Wales violets, a beautiful pan of white hyacinths, a vase of roses, pots of cyclamen, Primula stellata, P. Forbesii and a gorgeous display of Primula obconica, all being exceedingly well grown and of beautiful colors; also some fine clusters of greenhouse tomatoes, Stirling Castle being the variety. S. J. Trepass staged an equally beautiful table of cut flowers, flowering and foliage plants. He had a fine vase of mixed carnations; also pots of cyclamen, cineraria, Primula obconica and a grand pan of yellow tulips. H. F. Meyers had on his table some good carnations, a nice flowering bush of white lilac, and some superb spikes of antirrhinums. H. Matz showed a well grown pan of Asparagus Sprengeri and F. Mense a lovely bunch of 100 Princess of Wales violets.

The Mackenzie prize for the best flowering plant was won by T. Harrison with a basket of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, which was the admiration of all present.

S. J. Trepass' new seedling carnation, Maxwellton, a grand white with Lawson blood, received the society's certificate of merit, scoring eighty-seven and a half points. F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., showed a vase of their grand new carnation, Winsor. J. F. J.

ALBERT LEA, MINN.—P. Clausen & Son report business good and the outlet for stock constantly increasing. They will this spring build two more houses, each 28x110, for carnations, which are their specialty, but they also grow roses and a general line of cut flowers and plants for the retail trade.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held March 7. President Harrison in the chair. The attendance of members was large, making a record. Five new members were elected to active, and seven nominated to active membership; also two to honorary membership.

The chief business was the drafting of a schedule for the coming fall flower show. It is the earnest endeavor of the society to make this exhibition a thorough success. Some good prizes are already forthcoming. The silver cup, by Mrs. Percy Chubb, has been placed upon carnations, calling for fifty carnations in six standard varieties, arranged for effect. Generous gifts as prizes have also been given by Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, Glen Cove; Weber & Don and Stumpp & Walter Co., New York.

The floral exhibits by members at the meeting were many, diverse and highly interesting, showing throughout superb cultivation. Alexander Mackenzie staged a lovely table containing a vase of mixed carnations, a bunch of Princess of Wales violets, a beautiful pan of white hyacinths, a vase of roses, pots of cyclamen, Primula stellata, P. Forbesii and a gorgeous display of Primula obconica, all being exceedingly well grown and of beautiful colors; also some fine clusters of greenhouse tomatoes, Stirling Castle being the variety. S. J. Trepas staged an equally beautiful table of cut flowers, flowering and foliage plants. He had a fine vase of mixed carnations; also pots of cyclamen, cineraria, Primula obconica and a grand pan of yellow tulips. H. F. Meyers had on his table some good carnations, a nice flowering bush of white lilac, and some superb spikes of antirrhinums. H. Matz showed a well grown pan of Asparagus Sprengeri and F. Mense a lovely bunch of 100 Princess of Wales violets.

The Mackenzie prize for the best flowering plant was won by T. Harrison with a basket of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, which was the admiration of all present.

S. J. Trepas' new seedling carnation, Maxwellton, a grand white with Lawson blood, received the society's certificate of merit, scoring eighty-seven and a half points. F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., showed a vase of their grand new carnation, Winsor. J. F. J.

ALBERT LEA, MINN.—P. Clausen & Son report business good and the outlet for stock constantly increasing. They will this spring build two more houses, each 28x110, for carnations, which are their specialty, but they also grow roses and a general line of cut flowers and plants for the retail trade.

PEOPLE who know a good thing when they see it, and will take advantage of the same, must be possessed with good judgment and are generally successful. THE READERS' CORNER.

A Texas Town.

This is what you city folks would call a 30-cent town, but we are climbing very near the $1 round now. I have grown and sold carnations at $1 per dozen, which were the first raised and sold in Tyler. I have also sold chrysanthemums at $3 per dozen. Most of the cut flower trade is in funeral work, but taken altogether the business is growing nicely. Smith county is the center of the fruit-growing belt. Mrs. Frank Hewitt is planning to enlarge her carnation house next year. F. H.

MORE PAINT TALK

SOME TIME AGO WE SAID A LOT ABOUT OUR SOAKED-IN METHOD OF PRIMING OUR GREENHOUSE MATERIAL, NOW A WORD ON THE OTHER PAINTING

Did you know that all white lead which is ground with the oil in pulp form contains about five per cent moisture, that it is this moisture in the lead which causes the mildew, makes your paint blister and peel off? This is just the point that our chemists have found out beyond all doubt, and our years of experimenting with pulp-ground lead and bone-dry ground lead has proven to us that only the bone-dry lead will stand up under greenhouse conditions. Bone-dry lead is simply a lead which is thoroughly kiln-dried, all moisture excluded, then ground as fine as flour before it is mixed with the oil. This lead will then take six to eight gallons of oil to every hundred pounds against five gallons of pulp-ground lead. This, of course, makes it go just that much farther in laying, covering twenty-five per cent more at least. Because it is ground so fine, it mixes so thoroughly with the oil that it covers the wood with a perfect enamel, thus excluding all moisture, preventing all mildew, and when properly laid is guaranteed against cracking or peeling off.

Now this is not all about the paint question either. The oil that goes into the paint has a lot to do with it—and we have a lot to do with this oil. Next week we will tell you what we do with it. So you see it's these details after all that are important and every detail is given its right importance in our house-making. It pays to look to the firm who looks to details.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY

THE BOSTON EXHIBITION.

The annual exhibition of the American Rose Society in conjunction with that of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was held on March 23, 24 and 25, at Horticultural hall, Boston, and proved a magnificent success in every way. Not only were the entries far more numerous than a year ago, occupying over double last year's space, but weather conditions were as near perfect as possible and the attendance of the public larger than ever before. True, the low temperatures made extra care necessary in wrapping plants and flowers, but the clear skies and bright sunshine which prevailed during the exhibition cheered everyone and assisted in making the show the most successful of its kind ever held in America. The exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was a splendid one. It filled the main exhibition hall, loggia and small hall, while the society used the lecture hall.

The cut blooms were far more numerous than in 1905, and the quality also showed a distinct advance. The Beauty classes were the hardest to judge, competition being very keen. Liberty and Richmond were each finely shown. The winning vase of the latter, from Waban Conservatories, was more admired than any other in the hall. The vase of Chatenay, which won the Welch cup for the Exeter Rose Conservatories for the best vase of roses in the show, were probably the best of that variety ever staged. Brides and Bridesmaids were numerous shown. Golden Gate also had some excellent entries and seemed to take with the public. Gen. MacArthur, Wellesley and Killarney all had admirers and were finely shown. Brunners, Laings and other hybrids were but indifferently shown, not up to Boston's standard.

Pot roses were more of a feature than ever. Thomas Roland's group was superb, and Edgar, Steinhoff, Walsh and others showed many fine hybrid perpetuals and rambles. Boston this year had to lower its colors in one or two of the most important classes, after a struggle. Philadelphia deserved the honors secured and we doubt not but that future wars of the roses between the growers of the two cities will be given added zest by the Hub's temporary discomfiture. Prizes awarded by the Rose Society were as follows, for Division A:

There were five entries for the mantel and mirror decorations, from Edward MacMulkin, Penn Bros., J. M. Casey, Sidney Hoffman and Houghton & Clark. The last named firm used Killarney and Adiantum Farleyense, making a light and pleasing arrangement. With one exception the remaining competitors used treble the amount of flowers and greenery needed and the same was true of several of the dinner table decorations. Houghton & Clark used Killarney on their winning table. The general arrangement of the mantels and tables was far too heavy, but they aided materially in lending attractiveness to the show.

The first business session of the American Rose Society opened at 8 o'clock on Friday evening, with a fair attendance. President Alexander Montgomery read his annual address, which was as follows:

President's Address.

For the second time I have the honor to report to you on the progress made by this society. During the year the commendable encouragement which we have received from all over the country is evidence that the rose men are gradually becoming interested in our work. This interest is in a large measure due to the excellent work of our secretary, and also to the introduction of several new roses that give good promise of being valuable additions to our list of winter flowers. This branch of our busithat responds readily to their efforts toward improvement, while with the rose, even the most expert hybridizer finds it slow work to get anything that is an improvement. However, when one is offered for sale, both large and small growers should buy it and test it for themselves; if you don't succeed at first don't be in too great a hurry to condemn, but remember the Liberty and how few had good success with it at first, yet it became one of our most valuable varieties.

The rose of the future will undoubtedly be raised from a mixture of the tea and the hybrid blood, for in no other way can we expect to get the bright colors that are so much wanted. We may not be able to grow the future roses in the haphazard way that the true teas have been grown in the past, but by a careful study of their requirements our progressive rose men will have little difficulty in adapting themselves to the best methods of growing them. From what I have been able to learn from some of those who are devoting their best energies to the raising of new roses, the first great principle they have in mind is that a rose, to be of value, must have a strong constitution and be a vigorous grower, otherwise it will be guards the future of the rose business, for the rose will hold her proud place in the commercial world as well as in the world beautiful. The growth of the rose business in the past twenty-five years has been phenomenal; its growth in the future, I doubt not, will be equally great. Therefore, I say to the young men starting in, put forth your whole energy to acquire the best methods of cultivating the queen of flowers that you may produce her in the highest state of perfection. Don't be afraid to exhibit at our shows, and in this way induce a healthy rivalry; don't be afraid of being beaten, you cannot always win. Try again and if you are made of the right material for an exhibitor you will be surprised to find how one or two failures will stimulate to increased effort to win the coveted blue ribbon of our society.

It should be the duty of the American Rose Society to encourage the amateur rose grower in every possible way by distributing proper literature, giving directions how to plant, and also what to plant; yet our greatest effort should be put forth to enroll the commercial cut flower and plant men. We should not rest until we have every rose grower in the country on our membership list. The amateurs' interests are only local, they will not follow our exhibitions from place to place, consequently, when the exhibition goes away, as it must if it is to be a permanent success, they lose interest and drop off our list. Let us make our society of interest to the professional by making it profitable and distance will not deter him from being there. We may just as well look this question squarely in the face if we aim to be a permanent society, for sentiment doesn't count in the commercial world. The carnation man attends his convention that he may exhibit or see the new varieties, or so he can sell or buy stock, not for the love of the flower altogether does he go. The rose man is no different from his brother, the carnation man—there must be some profitable attraction to bring him out—therefore, it is the duty of every rose grower to make an exhibit of his wares at our exhibition; if he has something new so much the better, but the small grower, as well as the large, ought to do his part.

Let our society go to all parts of the country. They say a rolling stone gathers no moss, but I believe a rolling national Rose Society would gather members and corresponding strength.

In conclusion I wish to thank the members of the American Rose Society for the honor done me by twice electing me to be your president, and while I have fallen far short of what I wanted to accomplish for the society, yet I have done the best I could under the circumstances. Although I now step out of office, the society will still have my hearty co-operation and best wishes for its success.

Secretary's Report.

With another year of experience to our credit, we come again as guests of our good friends of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, to set up one more milestone in the history of the rose in America and the organization devoted to its advancement. How have we fared during the year since we last met in this room? The best answer I can give is to ask you to look at the splendid exhibition in the adjoining hall. Your secretary can give you facts and figures of Benjamin Hammond.

(Secretary of the American Rose Society.)

ness is worthy of all the encouragement our members can give it, as the future success of our society depends, to a great extent, upon the interest created by their introduction.

While we cannot expect to have a Richmond every year, yet there is evidence of other valuable varieties in sight that will help to whet the curiosity and consequently the interest of our rose growers. We cannot hope to compete with the carnation men in this respect, as they are fortunate in having a flower of little use to the American rose grower. A fine individual flower without these qualities will not satisfy. Many plants found in every batch of seedlings have ideal flowers but are so wanting in vigor of growth that they have to be discarded. It takes considerable courage to do this, yet the honesty of purpose of our seedling rose raisers can be depended upon to do it, as only by these heroic methods can the business prosper and the best interests of our society be conserved.

I am not the least pessimistic as rethe year's doings, but you who are privileged to see this exhibition will care more for the kind of evidence here given, that the rose growers are wide awake, that the American Rose Society is backed by workers both willing and capable and has now gotten safely beyond the point where any doubt could exist as to its permanency and usefulness.

For the first time since the organization of this society an annual report and bulletin has been published. In it are recorded the proceedings at the meeting in Boston one year ago and the doings of the executive committee in the meantime, including the delightful visit to the rose garden at Hartford, Conn., last June. Several well-prepared and instructive papers generously written by members for this purpose are included, together with a list of the members up to date. A few advertisements were inserted which materially reduced the cost of issuing the report. A copy was duly mailed to all members and further reference to it now is unnecessary except that your secretary has to acknowledge the unfortunate omission of a number of names that should have appeared in the published list of members, his own name being one of the unfortunate ones. The others were Miss C. Cruger, J. D. Eisele, A. Gude, W. F. Gude and Mrs. G. M. Reynolds.

The number of members who have paid annual dues during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, or later, is 112; the number of life members, forty-two; making the total membership March 20, 1906, 154. Of this number twenty-two are new members added since March 21, 1905. Resignations received since that date have been fourteen.

As I have said, the problem of the existence and prosperity of the American Rose Society seems now to have been solved. Under its standard are gathered not only the commercial cut flower growers with their marvelous enterprise and giant influence, but specialists in roses for the garden, park and the dwelling house. The hybridist and fancier, no matter what direction his enthusiasm may take, is coming to be a believer in and a supporter of the Rose Society. Your secretary is of the opinion that our best success lies in holding the affairs of the organization under professional management for the present at least, it being clearly the duty of the practical rosarian first to establish the organization on a sound foundation and then, by such educational means as are possible, to widen the circle of the society's scope and popularity.

No better beginning can be made than the assembling of an exhibition, alike creditable in extent and quality, such as we have in evidence on this occasion. Under existing circumstances our strongest appeal to the people lies in the exhibition feature. Other work will follow in course. Hybridization, cultural experimenting and investigation must be encouraged and results carefully tabulated and given widespread publicity. All this means work unremitting, methodical and self-sacrificing, but if it is undertaken in the right spirit we shall have something to show for it all a year or two hence.

It is a knowledge of this urgent necessity which prompts me to ask that you now place the office of secretary in the hands of some one who can give it much more time than I am able to devote to it. I have realized all along, since assuming the duties of secretary, that the time and effort I have been able to spend in the work have been most inadequate to the pressing needs of the society. Some one should be secured who can keep up a vigorous campaign all through the year and build up the membership so that the annual dues may be sufficient to pay running expenses. Our field is a wide one and its possibilities far from being disclosed as yet.

Good of the Order.

The treasurer's report brought up a general discussion. John H. Taylor advocated a permanent fund, the interest from which would pay running expenses of the society. E. A. Reed, Holyoke, thought a great effort should be made by the society to interest more people, especially amateurs. Robert Simpson thought the best method was for each to endeavor to secure more members. Membership could be lifted to 500 or 1,000, and eventually with the co-operation of amateurs to 5,000. We must, however, get up enthusiasm to achieve such results. A. Farenwald thought efforts should first be made to secure all professional growers and amateurs later. Benj. Dorrance thought that there should be more accord between growers and retailers. J. H. Taylor suggested that the secretary be instructed to ask all growers in the country if they would help the promotion of a permanent fund at $100 each. Messrs. Patrick Welch, Geo.

C. Watson and W. H. Elliott spoke on the subject briefly. W. C. Barry said all successful organizations have permanent funds. Benjamin Dorrance suggested that the rose firms give the society some advertising space in their catalogues asking outsiders to join the society. James Wheeler urged all to go ahead and get up enthusiasm, which is a vital necessity to ensure success.

Papers were next read by P. J. Lynch and J. J. Curran, each of whom received a vote of thanks. George Asmus' paper was ordered referred and printed. Mr. Asmus regretted his inability to be present. A. Farenwald's paper followed.

Mr. Pray's paper on soluble fertilizers caused some discussion, in which W. H. Elliott and A. Farenwald took part. The last speaker said he had become dissatisfied with the varying qualities in bone and now used blood. It caused a bad odor for a time, but was better for the plants.

An adjourned session was called to order by President Montgomery at 2:30 p. m. on Saturday. Nominations for president were first in order. Mr. Montgomery would not be a candidate for a third term. Robert Simpson, P. J. Lynch and H. A. Siebrecht were nominated. Mr. Simpson at first declined to allow his name to be used, but finally withdrew his objections. He was elected. For vice-president F. R. Pierson and Alexander Montgomery, Jr., were nominated. The latter withdrew his name Adiantum Farleyense, making a light and pleasing arrangement. With one exception the remaining competitors used treble the amount of flowers and greenery needed and the same was true of several of the dinner table decorations. Houghton & Clark used Killarney on their winning table. The general arrangement of the mantels and tables was far too heavy, but they aided materially in lending attractiveness to the show.

The first business session of the American Rose Society opened at 8 o'clock on Friday evening, with a fair attendance. President Alexander Montgomery read his annual address, which was as follows:

President's Address.

For the second time I have the honor to report to you on the progress made by this society. During the year the commendable encouragement which we have received from all over the country is evidence that the rose men are gradually becoming interested in our work. This interest is in a large measure due to the excellent work of our secretary, and also to the introduction of several new roses that give good promise of being valuable additions to our list of winter flowers. This branch of our business is worthy of all the encouragement our members can give it, as the future success of our society depends, to a great extent, upon the interest created by their introduction.

ness is worthy of all the encouragement our members can give it, as the future success of our society depends, to a great extent, upon the interest created by their introduction.

that responds readily to their efforts toward improvement, while with the rose, even the most expert hybridizer finds it slow work to get anything that is an improvement. However, when one is offered for sale, both large and small growers should buy it and test it for themselves; if you don't succeed at first don't be in too great a hurry to condemn, but remember the Liberty and how few had good success with it at first, yet it became one of our most valuable varieties.

The rose of the future will undoubtedly be raised from a mixture of the tea and the hybrid blood, for in no other way can we expect to get the bright colors that are so much wanted. We may not be able to grow the future roses in the haphazard way that the true teas have been grown in the past, but by a careful study of their requirements our progressive rose men will have little difficulty in adapting themselves to the best methods of growing them. From what I have been able to learn from some of those who are devoting their best energies to the raising of new roses, the first great principle they have in mind is that a rose, to be of value, must have a strong constitution and be a vigorous grower, otherwise it will be of little use to the American rose grower. A fine individual flower without these qualities will not satisfy. Many plants found in every batch of seedlings have ideal flowers but are so wanting in vigor of growth that they have to be discarded. It takes considerable courage to do this, yet the honesty of purpose of our seedling rose raisers can be depended upon to do it, as only by these heroic methods can the business prosper and the best interests of our society be conserved.

I am not the least pessimistic as regards the future of the rose business, for the rose will hold her proud place in the commercial world as well as in the world beautiful. The growth of the rose business in the past twenty-five years has been phenomenal; its growth in the future, I doubt not, will be equally great. Therefore, I say to the young men starting in, put forth your whole energy to acquire the best methods of cultivating the queen of flowers that you may produce her in the highest state of perfection. Don't be afraid to exhibit at our shows, and in this way induce a healthy rivalry; don't be afraid of being beaten, you cannot always win. Try again and if you are made of the right material for an exhibitor you will be surprised to find how one or two failures will stimulate to increased effort to win the coveted blue ribbon of our society.

It should be the duty of the American Rose Society to encourage the amateur rose grower in every possible way by distributing proper literature, giving directions how to plant, and also what to plant; yet our greatest effort should be put forth to enroll the commercial cut flower and plant men. We should not rest until we have every rose grower in the country on our membership list. The amateurs' interests are only local, they will not follow our exhibitions from place to place, consequently, when the exhibition goes away, as it must if it is to be a permanent success, they lose interest and drop off our list. Let us make our society of interest to the professional by making it profitable and distance will not deter him from being there. We may just as well look this question squarely in the face if we aim to be a permanent society, for sentiment doesn't count in the commercial world. The carnation man attends his convention that he may exhibit or see the new varieties, or so he can sell or buy stock; not for the love of the flower altogether does he go. The rose man is no different from his brother, the carnation man—there must be some profitable attraction to bring him out; therefore, it is the duty of every rose grower to make an exhibit of his wares at our exhibition; if he has something new so much the better, but the small grower, as well as the large, ought to do his part.

Let our society go to all parts of the country. They say a rolling stone gathers no moss, but I believe a rolling national Rose Society would gather members and corresponding strength.

In conclusion I wish to thank the members of the American Rose Society for the honor done me by twice electing me to be your president, and while I have fallen far short of what I wanted to accomplish for the society, yet I have done the best I could under the circumstances. Although I now step out of office, the society will still have my hearty co-operation and best wishes for its success.

Secretary's Report.

With another year of experience to our credit, we come again as guests of our good friends of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, to set up one more milestone in the history of the rose in America and the organization devoted to its advancement. How have we fared during the year since we last met in this room? The best answer I can give is to ask you to look at the splendid exhibition in the adjoining hall. Your secretary can give you facts and figures of

The last gentleman was chosen after Mr. Watson had withdrawn in his favor. M. H. Walsh resigned from the executive committee, owing to inability to attend the meetings. J. J. Curran, Peter Bisset and W. A. Manda were elected directors.

The question of the selection of the next meeting place was opened by A. Farenwald, who spoke in favor of Chicago. Winfried Rolker suggested Rochester. Harry O. May thought the question should be left to the executive committee. Benjamin Dorrance said there was a standing offer from the American Institute, New York, to hold their show there at any time. Geo. C. Simpson thought Kansas City would be a good city to meet in. It was decided to leave the matter in the hands of the executive committee.

A short discussion arose over the issuance of certificates of the society to American raised roses and the possibility of protecting any floral novelties by patents.

Thanks were tendered to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston for their entertainment, and the local daily press for liberal notices of the exhibition.

The Banquet.

Alexander Montgomery, the first speaker, received an ovation. He said the grand audience and the crowds flocking to the exhibition attested that the rose is still queen of flowers. Robert Simpson received an enthusiastic welcome. He said he was really more a man of work than of speech. He considered the exhibition in the several halls the best ever gotten up in America.

W. P. Rich welcomed all present in the name of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. Miss Pettigrew, daughter of J. A. Pettigrew, favored the audience with a solo which was vigorously encored. F. R. Pierson said he came so often to Boston that he felt he really belonged there. Boston has set a great pace this time. There was no other city where so much all around good stock could be seen under one roof.

W. C. Barry wished he could impress on all present the importance and dignity of the American Rose Society. If it is not at the top, it certainly belongs there. An exhibition superior to the one seen could only be had by a supreme effort.

Peter Fisher was called upon to speak for the sister Carnation Society. Colonel Castle spoke for the city of Boston.

Convention Jottings.

The new president of the Rose Society is cool headed, practical, an ideal man for the position. It entails much hard work, worry and responsibility, as is well known, but no member of the society will make a worthier successor to Alex. Montgomery.

The Minneapolis belle, Miss Kate Moulton, arrived in very good condition and many liked it. Queen Beatrice, from F. H. Kramer, was also on hand.

Roland's prize group of pot roses on the stage consisted of a number of plants each of Crimson Rambler, Philadelphia Rambler, Lady Gay, Farquhar, Dorothy Perkins and Magna Charta. All were beautifully grown and well merited the silver cup received.

Zero weather and deep snow seemed strange for the rose meeting; for the carnation meeting it would have been more seasonable. Temperatures 6 degrees below zero were recorded within twenty-five miles of Boston on March 25.

We hope that Chicago will invite the Rose Society for the next convention. Too bad the western growers could not have seen the Boston show. In many respects it would have been a surprise to them. We had one Chicago gentleman present. He said the rose plants would create a sensation in his city. We hope it will be Chicago 1907, and we feel sure it can be made a memorable show.

The new secretary, Benjamin Hammond, will put persistence, energy and enthusiasm into his position, the vice-president is well known as a hustler and with the same treasurer we think the new board a strong one, and likely to render a good account of itself.

Walsh's rambles were as usual a great feature of the exhibition; it was a big task to ship so many big plants such a distance in the severe weather we horticultural interests of Boston to the American Rose Society took place at the Hotel Brunswick on Saturday evening. The tables were decorated under the supervision of Patrick Welch and Edward Hatch, roses, of course, being lavishly used. After the reception, about 200 sat down. James Wheeler introduced as toastmaster Prof. L. C. Elson, of the New England Conservatory of Music. He said in opening "that a musical conservatory where there are he had visited. He spoke of the fine culture of Miltonia vexillaria near Boston and hoped we would soon be able to grow Odontoglossum Alexandræ, the queen of orchids, by the hundreds of thousands as they do in Europe.

Other speakers were P. J. Lynch, G. C. Watson, Benj. Dorrance, A. Farenwald and Geo. Buxton.

had, and Mr. Walsh deserves all praise for his achievement.

Soleil d'Or and Frau Karl Druschki were much admired among the pot plants. Baby Ramblers were well grown, and what a wealth of material in the rambler class was shown! Herein lies one of the great future hopes of the American Rose Society. By broadening this branch the army of non-professional growers will become increasingly interested.

The attendance at the exhibition was a record breaking one; especially was this the case during the band concerts. Locomotion was difficult during a large part of Sunday owing to the crowds. Richmond seemed to be the favorite with most of the visitors.

The Holly-Castle electric circulator was in operation at the rear of the main exhibition hall and attracted the notice of many growers.

H. M. Robinson & Co. made a nice display of their sundries in the main hall. W. N. C.

BOSTON SPRING SHOW.

The annual spring show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, held in conjunction with the rose show, was well up to the usual standard. Owing to the severely cold weather there were fewer large plants than usual, but flowering plants were more numerous and better. M. H. Walsh took all the prizes for roses with some splendid specimens, also all the prizes for groups of ramblers and other decorative roses suitable for landscape effects. E. MacMulkin won on azaleas, etc.

In the bulb classes William Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener, almost completely swept the deck. He captured in the various plant classes eighteen firsts, seven seconds and one third. Thomas Roland was first for group of Easter plants, which included Canterbury bells and well-flowered Lilium speciosum.

W. H. Elliott took the lion's share of the prizes in the rose classes.

Carnations made quite an extensive showing. For crimson Patten & Co. led, S. J. Goddard second, Baker & Co. third, all on Fenn. For dark pink F. F. Matthews was first and E. A. Wood second, both with Lawson; Stevens Co. third for Pink Patten. In light pink W. Nicholson, G. E. Buxton and Patten & Co. won in the order named, all with Enchantress. Stevens Co. won on scarlet with Manley, Goddard second with Cardinal, Patten & Co. third with Manley.

Lady Bountiful won all prizes for white, the winners being G. E. Buxton, S. J. Goddard and W. Nicholson. In yellow Backer & Co. took first and second on Golden Glow and Eldorado. For white variegated Patten & Co. were first with Mrs. Patten, F. R. Pierson second on Variegated Lawson, W. Nicholson third on Patten.

For Campbell violets M. Orr, E. Bingham and H. F. Calder won. One hundred double any other variety, first H. F. Woods, Swanley White; second same for Marie Louise; third N. F. Comley, Swanley White. On Princess of Wales, Sim, Comley and Bingham were winners. On 100 any single, Sim was first for Governor Herrick, Mrs. Ayer second for California, H. F. Woods third for California.

For best display of cut orchids J. E. Rothwell, Emil Johansson gardener, won the silver gilt medal with a splendid collection filling over 200 vases.

Miscellaneous exhibits were unusually numerous and interesting. Peter Fisher had fine vases of Evangeline, seedling No. 500 and Beacon. Wm. Nicholson had Aristocrat and Afterglow. John E. Haines had a nice vase of John E. Haines. Peirce Bros.' scarlet, Governor Gould, looked well; it received honorable mention. S. J. Goddard showed Helen Goddard. F. R. Pierson Co. received a certificate for Winsor. Backer & Co. had a good yellow seedling. Guttman & Weber showed a fine vase of Victory. Patten & Co. had five large vases of Mikado and Pink Patten. H. A. Jahn had his white seedling, No. 49. Wm. Sim showed magnificent vases of Sunbeams, Mont Blanc and Earliest of All sweet peas.

W. W. Edgar showed Adiantum Edgari, awarded honorable mention. F. R. Pierson Co. had a table of Nephrolepis Piersoni elegantissima. Thomas Roland had Bougainvillea Sanderiana and some finely trained and flowered plants of Mahernia odorata, the latter awarded a bronze medal. W. W. Rawson Co. planted a large oval bed on the floor inside the entrance hallway, with Vitex Ophir d'Or, edged with trifolium.

Lager & Hurrell had a nice group of seasonable orchids, awarded a first-class certificate. Julius Roehrs Co. had a table of foliage plants and some seasonable orchids. A. C. Zvolanek had a collection of his winter blooming sweet peas, which received a certificate of merit.

James Crenshaw received honorable mention for a very promising seedling asparagus, distinct from plumosus nanus, very excellent for decorative purposes.

M. H. Walsh showed some specimen plants of new rambler roses not previously seen here. The most striking was Delight, awarded a first-class certificate. This is a little lighter in color than Hiawatha and was the most admired rambler plant in the hall.

H. H. Barrows & Son received a silver gilt medal for Nephrolepis Whitmani, which took the eye of everyone.

Convention Jottings.

The new president of the Rose Society is cool headed, practical, an ideal man for the position. It entails much hard work, worry and responsibility, as is well known, but no member of the society will make a worthier successor to Alex. Montgomery.

The Minneapolis belle, Miss Kate Moulton, arrived in very good condition and many liked it. Queen Beatrice, from F. H. Kramer, was also on hand.

Roland's prize group of pot roses on the stage consisted of a number of plants each of Crimson Rambler, Philadelphia Rambler, Lady Gay, Farquhar, Dorothy Perkins and Magna Charta. All were beautifully grown and well merited the silver cup received.

Zero weather and deep snow seemed strange for the rose meeting; for the carnation meeting it would have been more seasonable. Temperatures 6 degrees below zero were recorded within twenty-five miles of Boston on March 25.

We hope that Chicago will invite the Rose Society for the next convention. Too bad the western growers could not have seen the Boston show. In many respects it would have been a surprise to them. We had one Chicago gentleman present. He said the rose plants would create a sensation in his city. We hope it will be Chicago 1907, and we feel sure it can be made a memorable show.

The new secretary, Benjamin Hammond, will put persistence, energy and enthusiasm into his position, the vice-president is well known as a hustler and with the same treasurer we think the new board a strong one, and likely to render a good account of itself.

Walsh's rambles were as usual a great feature of the exhibition; it was a big task to ship so many big plants such a distance in the severe weather we horticultural interests of Boston to the American Rose Society took place at the Hotel Brunswick on Saturday evening. The tables were decorated under the supervision of Patrick Welch and Edward Hatch, roses, of course, being lavishly used. After the reception, about 200 sat down. James Wheeler introduced as toastmaster Prof. L. C. Elson, of the New England Conservatory of Music. He said in opening "that a musical conservatory where there are he had visited. He spoke of the fine culture of Miltoia vexillaria near Boston and hoped we would soon be able to grow Odontoglossum Alexandrae, the queen of orchids, by the hundreds of thousands as they do in Europe.

Other speakers were P. J. Lynch, G. C. Watson, Benj. Dorrance, A. Farenwald and Geo. Buxton.

Some of the Visitors.

had, and Mr. Walsh deserves all praise for his achievement.

Soleil d'Or and Frau Karl Druschki were much admired among the pot plants. Baby Ramblers were well grown, and what a wealth of material in the rambler class was shown! Herein lies one of the great future hopes of the American Rose Society. By broadening this branch the array of non-professional growers will become increasingly interested.

The attendance at the exhibition was a record-breaking one; especially was this the case during the band concerts. Locomotion was difficult during a large part of Sunday owing to the crowds. Richmond seemed to be the favorite with most of the visitors.

The Holly Castle electric circulator was in operation at the rear of the main exhibition hall and attracted the notice of many growers.

H. M. Robinson & Co. made a nice display of their sundries in the main hall.

BOSTON SPRING SHOW.

The annual spring show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, held in conjunction with the rose show, was well up to the usual standard. Owing to the severely cold weather there were fewer large plants than usual, but flowering plants were more numerous and better. M. H. Walsh took all the prizes for roses with some splendid specimens, also all the prizes for groups of ramblers and other decorative roses suitable for landscape effects. E. MacMulkin won on azaleas, etc.

In the bulb classes William Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener, almost completely swept the deck. He captured in the various plant classes eighteen firsts, seven seconds and one third. Thomas Roland was first for group of Easter plants, which included Canterbury bells and well-flowered Lilium speciosum.

W. H. Elliott took the lion's share of the prizes in the rose classes.

Carnations made quite an extensive showing. For crimson Patten & Co. led, S. J. Goddard second, Baker & Co. third, all on Fenn. For dark pink F. C. Matthews was first and E. A. Wood second, both with Lawson; Stevens Co. third for Pink Patten. In light pink W. Nicholson, G. E. Buxton and Patten & Co. won in the order named, all with Enchantress. Stevens Co. won on scarlet with Manley, Goddard second with Cardinal, Patten & Co. third with Manley.

Lady Bountiful won all prizes for white, the winners being G. E. Buxton, S. J. Goddard and W. Nicholson. In yellow Backer & Co. took first and second on Golden Glow and Eldorado. For white variegated Patten & Co. were first with Mrs. Patten, F. R. Pierson second on Variegated Lawson, W. Nicholson third on Patten.

For Campbell violets M. Orr, E. Bingham and H. E. Calder won. One hundred double any other variety, first H. F. Woods, Swanley White; second same for Marie Louise; third N. E. Conley, Swanley White. On Princess of Wales, Sun, Conley and Bingham were winners. On Ten any single Sun was first for Governor Herrick, Mrs. Aver second for California, H. F. Woods third for California.

For best display of cut orchids J. L. Rotiwell, Emil Johanson gardener, won the silver gift medal with a splendid collection filling over 200 vases.

Miscellaneous exhibits were unusually numerous and interesting. Peter Fisher had fine vases of Evangeline, seedling No. 500 and Beacon. Wm. Nicholson had Aristocrat and Afterglow. John E. Haines had a nice vase of John I. Haines. Peirce Bros.' scarlet, Governor Gould, looked well; it received honorable mention. S. J. Goddard showed Helen Goddard. F. R. Pierson Co. received a certificate for Winsor. Backer & Co. had a good yellow seedling. Guffman & Weber showed a fine vase of Victory. Patten & Co. had five large vases of Mikado and Pink Patten. H. A. John had his white seedling, No. 49. Wm. Sim showed magnificent vases of Sunbeams, Mont Blanc and Earliest of All sweet peas.

W. W. Edgar showed Adiantum Edgar awarded honorable mention. F. R. Pierson Co. had a table of Nephrolepis Pierson elegantissima. Thomas Roland had Bougainvillea Sanderiana and some finely trained and flowered plants of Malieria odorata, the latter awarded a bronze medal. W. W. Rawson Co. planted a large oval bed on the floor inside the entrance hallway with Ades Opus d'Or, edged with trifolium.

Eager & Hurrell had a nice group of seasonable orchids, awarded a first class certificate. Julius Roehrs Co. had a table of foliage plants and some seasonable orchids. A. C. Zvolanek had a collection of his winter blooming sweet peas, which received a certificate of merit.

James Crenshaw received honorable mention for a very promising seedling asparagus, distinct from plumosa, very excellent for decorative use.

M. H. Walsh showed some splendid plants of new rambler roses, not previously seen here. The most striking was Delight, awarded a first class certificate. This is a little lighter in color than Harwin and was the most admired rambler plant in the hall.

H. H. Barrows & Son received a silver gift medal for Nephrolepis Warrington, which took the eye of everyone.

DETERIORATION OF FORCING ROSES.

[A paper by A. Farenwald, Hillside, Pa., read before the American Rose Society at Boston, March 23, 1906.]

"Our Failures," I might justly call the introduction to this subject. Little do we hear of these failures in our trade papers. Why? Because very few care publicly to ventilate their failures. Pride, no doubt, often prevents growers from proclaiming these, whereby others might gain valuable information. One of the main objects of the Rose Society is to seek and distribute this information concerning roses.

In handling this topic I shall merely confine myself to stating facts with which all of you, I am sure, have more or less come in contact, leaving it for the discussion to find the cause and remedy, if it be possible.

In the first place, are our forcing roses deteriorating? If they are, why? Can anyone prove by their records that they are still producing as many flowers per plant as they did in the early stages of their introduction, as in Brides, or Maids, Beauties, or any other older forcing variety? If they are not, what seems to be the reason?

In years gone by it was a common thing to see Brides and Maids growing from young plants on own roots in one season to a height of from four to five feet, giving from thirty to forty, or even more, flowers on good stiff stems per plant. But, how often do we see it now?

Again, why have so many growers been forced to introduce the system of grafting in growing Brides, Maids and nearly every other forcing rose, with the exception of Beauties, where in former years plants on own roots did as well and better? Diseases were then as they are now, but were conditions as favorable to them then as now? Should conditions be more favorable now, why should such be the case? Are we less careful in the methods of propagation, or too much addicted to the use of highly concentrated fertilizers? Whatever the cause or causes may be, the fact remains that places which were known for their excellence in growing Brides or Maids had to cease growing them grafted or own roots.

With American Beauty, our strongest growing forcing rose, the same state of affairs holds good. Here is an illustration, recently told me by a grower of Beauties who had remarkable success with them. In the first year they brought him $16,000. Year after year, however, they gradually brought less, until eight years later they only brought $3,500, with the same amount of plants as at first. Of course he had to give up growing them. Can anyone throw light on this and similar cases happening all over the country?

In concluding, I hope that the members present will take a lively interest in discussing these important questions, but I would also appeal to all practical rose growers all over the country, who, if they should read them, if they think they have any solution for some of these vital questions, to take an opportunity to state them in their best beloved trade paper, even though it be but a few lines. I am sure it would be greatly appreciated by all concerned.

LATEST METHODS IN GROWING.

[A Paper by J. J. Curran, Elmira, N. Y., read before the American Rose Society at its Boston meeting March 23, 1906.]

When I undertook to read a paper before your society on this subject I had little thought that in my researches into the newer methods I should find so little that was really new. It is an old saying, and a true one, that there is nothing new under the sun and I am somewhat inclined now to be of that opinion also, for just as I would be congratulating myself on having found or heard of something new, along comes one of the old boys and tells me that this same method has been followed in years gone by. After a few of these disappointments I made up my mind to give you such facts as I have gathered in my researches. If they contain anything new, so much the better; if they are old they may bring back pleasant recollections to some of us, and renew the scenes of our youthful battles.

Owe Much to Hybridists.

When starting to review the newer phases of rose culture it will be appropriate to start with the beginning of the rose plant. By this I do not mean the cutting, or scion, which, of course, is no new plant but simply a perpetuation of a branch of the original plant.

I mean the product of the hybridist's art. The skill, care and untiring energy which these gentlemen have brought to bear on this branch of the business has been of infinite benefit to the craft, inasmuch as we now have a larger field from which to choose our varieties; I may also add that we have finer and more suitable varieties to choose from, because these varieties have been raised, having in view their suitability for forcing purposes.

These gentlemen deserve the thanks of all growers, and among a host of other workers our worthy president and E. G. Hill, who have recently given us two such valuable varieties as Wellesley and Richmond, deserve our especial thanks. Devoting very little time to this branch of the business, I am unable to give you any new pointers, and if our hybridists have learned anything new they are holding it up for future use, or perhaps they are only exercising that Scotch caution recommended by the immortal Burns:

"Aye free aff hand your story tell,
When wi' a bosom crony,
But still keep something to yoursel,
Ye scarcely tell to ony."

The Ordinary Grower.

After having secured new varieties of merit, the work of the ordinary grower begins. In order to produce stock in quantity and quality from these new varieties is the condition now confronting us so that we may be remunerated for our skill and labor.

Profiting by the mistakes made in by-gone years our disseminators do not now force the life and constitution out of the variety in order to secure large quantities of young stock for market, but, rather, grow it on a year or two longer, studying its character and peculiarities and paying especial regard to maintaining and improving its constitution, so that now when a variety is disseminated we have every confidence that it will respond to ordinary cultural methods when due regard is taken of any peculiar habits or traits it may possess.

The time-honored method of perpetuating varieties by cuttings is still almost universally in practice and, when soil is suitable, some varieties of stock so propagated succeed well. This subject has called for a good deal of experiment and discussion of late years and I think it is conceded by most growers that where the soil is of a loamy nature, most varieties at present in cultivation under glass succeed equally as well, if not better, than grafted stock. Where the soil is of a poor quality, requiring large supplies of liquid or other food, it stands to reason that plants grafted on Manetti or other stocks possessing an abundance of fine feeding roots, can absorb and use it to more advantage than own root stock.

Propagating By Grafting.

Propagating by grafting being practically new in this country as applied to stock under glass, there is a better field for advance and improvement, both as regards the variety and class of stock to be used, the style of graft, quality, size of scion and after treatment.

Within the past few years I have seen many improvements in this method of propagation, because, instead of being only copyists, we are doing our own thinking, and when we have to think for ourselves we are just as certain to improve as that the sun will rise in the east.

Most of the establishments which practice grafting in quantities are equipped with neat and sensible cases in which to care for the young stock until it is fit to be placed on the bench and this I consider the most essential element to success. That grafted stock is being used more freely year by year is certain and this very fact proves that we are moving along the right lines, but before we drop our root stock entirely, we should first satisfy ourselves by experiment that our soil and varieties are best adapted to grafted stock, as indiscriminate planting of grafted stock irrespective of quality of soil and other conditions may not always be a success.

Best Bench for Roses.

The most suitable kind of a bench for rose culture has also been a much discussed question and this discussion has led to many real and economic improvements. There is a wide difference between the old lumber bench of twenty years ago, with the everlasting repairs which kept it company, and the neat and indestructible iron and tile benches of the present day. Even in the matter of solid benches for those who still have a favor for them there is a decided improvement. Bringing as we do our experience of the past and our scientific knowledge regarding aëration and drainage of soil into our service, we are able to build benches better suited to the requirements of the stock.

In respect to planting we cannot say we have made any great advances in recent years, the same general principles applying as formerly. Some few years ago we imagined we were on the verge of discovering something new regarding watering and the theory of sub-irrigation was given an impartial trial by many of our expert growers, only to be relegated after a time to "the realms of innocuous desuetude." Other schemes, automatic and otherwise, have been advocated and tried, but so far as the rose is concerned we have to depend on the accurate judgment of the man with the quick eye and the deft hand for our success.

Soil Chemistry.

Our studies in plant and soil chemistry are every year bringing us nearer perfection in cultural methods, particularly as regards the quality of food required by the plants in confinement under our care, where we have to attend to their every want and supply it at the proper time. It is encouraging and a gratifying augury to find so many of our young brethren devoting themselves to the attainment of knowledge on a scientific basis. They are sure of their reward.

In our battles with our insect and parasitic enemies we have been ably supported and advised by some of the best entomologists and professors of horticulture who have supplied us with the life histories of nearly all insects and parasites injurious to our crops and the most effective means of exterminating them or keeping them in check. Our thanks are especially due to Prof. Byron D. Halstead for the much needed advice and information he has given us on these subjects.

Most Radical Advancement.

During the past decade our most radical advancement has been in horticultural construction and heating systems as applied to the same. Not so many years ago when we thought of building we had ourselves to be architect and builder, plan and lay down our own heating system and be general utility man. We have now professional architects vying with each other as to who will produce the most economic, shadeless and handsome buildings, suited to our wants, with heating systems and ventilating apparatus, which are simply perfection when compared to our buildings and appliances of twenty years ago. When we compare the handsome, lofty, almost shadeless and well ventilated structures of the present with the low-walled, heavy-raftered, hand-ventilated building of twenty or twenty-five years ago we must wonder how it was possible for the growers of those days to produce such excellent stock as they did. We also have the advantage of high-class educational trade papers, in the columns of which we can in a friendly way discuss questions pertaining to the profession and which I consider can with justice, lay claim to the credit of aiding us very materially in our progress.

Much Done By Society.

Last but not least we have the society which through the energetic efforts of its officers has done much to make the rose popular, to gather and disseminate knowledge as to cultural methods, control of pests, etc., and to foster that brotherly feeling among the craft, where friendly discussions of our many interests must of necessity be of the greatest importance and lead to advancement.

So that with the advanced methods and our past experience to guide us and the knowledge science has placed at our command and the faculties we enjoy in improved construction, perfect ventilating machinery, excellent heating systems and our advanced scientific knowledge, the outlook for the rose grower is of a rosier hue than it has ever been in the history of American floriculture.

HAVERHILL, MASS.—The A. W. Merrow Co. has been incorporated, with $5,000 capital stock, to conduct the business of florist and undertaker.

GREENSBURG, PA.—Joseph Thomas says that the only trouble this year is to keep stock cool enough. Many of his Easter plants want to bloom too early.

STRATFORD, CONN.—C. Mills has nearly completed the building of a greenhouse which is much larger than his old one. He ships considerable stock to the Bridgeport trade.

THE MAIL ORDER TRADE.

[A paper by P. J. Lynch, West Grove, Pa., read before the American Rose Society at Boston, March 23, 1906.]

In considering the scope to which I should confine the subject, I have taken it for granted that to keep within the propaganda of this society I must speak with special reference to the rose as a mail order commodity, yet the subject, "The Mail Order Trade," in plants, has been touched upon so little by any of our national societies, I shall, therefore, treat it somewhat broadly.

We have no governmental statistics to give an idea of the magnitude of the present mail order trade in plants. I doubt if very many of us realize the great work being done in this branch of our industry, a work whose power to advance the material growth and welfare of floriculture has been, and is, perhaps, the greatest factor in our present unparalleled prosperity. Your mail order man is the pioneer and pathfinder of the craft that has carried to the remote parts of the country the gospel of loving flowers, especially roses, and how to get and grow them. He has been, in a measure, the educator of the masses, many of whom are not in close touch with the large centers of population where the rose as grown for cut flowers can make its own appeal. He has been a factor in beautifying the waste places of our land, and it is my thought that the great work in which we are engaged has but commenced. Each year this great government of ours continues to improve the efficiency of the mail service, so that today there is not a post-office in any part of the union where rose plants cannot be delivered with entire safety.

Parcels Post System.

When the time shall come that corporate greed will not stand in the way

Great Britain, and no measure that we can oppose, if I am not digressing from the subject, is so detrimental to the interests of the mail order trade as this absurd free distribution of seeds by the United States government.

The mail order man is not a youngster. He has been around quite a long while. In 1869 the firm with which I am connected published an advertisement in the New York Tribune offering to send to any post-office in the United States fresh, live, growing plants, on their own roots, and guaranteed the safe arrival. This proposition evidently was taken as a good joke, for we got no orders from it. Since those days marvelous advances have been made. Throughout the land there are to my direct knowledge 105 mail order establishments, comprising millions of feet of glass, devoted exclusively to sending plants, roses principally, by mail. For catalogues and advertising alone I estimate that there is spent annually $1,500,000. Some of these catalogues are gems of the printers' art, and as a rule they are sent free to customers and to all others who ask for them. Through liberal advertising in the national weekly and monthly publications the public is kept advised that your mail order man is ready with the goods. It has been said, but I believe facetiously, that our descriptions of the wares we have to offer are occasionally too seductive, but I am sure, however, the sincerity of purpose cannot be questioned.

Must Be Enthusiasts.

To be successful we must be enthusiasts, and in figuring the expense of printing these catalogues and advertising them appropriately your mail order man must have his nerve with him, because the proposition calls for sums of money in this department of publicity business; that to intimate that one intends to build means a busy time with our genial solicitor, but if you have never been in contact with the gentlemen who solicit for our large printing houses there is in store for you an experience that will add much to the zest of living.

Having, we shall assume, survived this strenuous preliminary of placing the printing contract, the work of preparing copy for the printer means weeks, and in many instances months of careful, painstaking labor. The material for each department is collated from time to time throughout the year, the space it is to occupy is determined upon, then the material is carefully edited and made to fit into the allotted space, all of which requires an outlay of energy that would be almost impossible in the short space of time given to the work, unless these details were not carefully systematized.

Postage a Serious Item.

At all times it must be kept in mind that the matter of postage upon big editions is a very serious item and where the weight exceeds the estimated weight even by the smallest fraction of an ounce, one cent is thereby added, the rate being one cent for every two ounces or fractional part thereof. Having finished the catalogue, they are mailed to the most distant states at the most seasonable times, that the suggestion produced by the arrival of the catalogue will not be lost through unfavorable weather conditions.

In the rose trade the period of activity is confined from January 15 to June 1. Orders must be handled with great skill and dispatch, and it is not uncommon in our large establishments during the busy days to fill an order a minute.

It will be seen that the average mail order man has no extended periods of relaxation, for having placed his advertising campaign in operation he is called upon almost immediately to see to it that the promises and conditions he has set forth in his literature are made good, therefore, as a rule, he assumes personal supervision of the order department. He must of necessity know the business thoroughly, and must ever be upon the alert to secure the very latest and most meritorious varieties and it is here that his acquaintance with geographical conditions must serve him in good stead, for a rose that succeeds admirably in New Orleans will not bring satisfaction to the planter in Boston, and as all parts of the country must be served, the mail order man is keenly alert to test the merits of every new rose introduced. He must ever keep in mind that to advance his business he must first satisfy the public.

Must Study Human Nature.

The mail order trade has developed wonderfully within the last ten years and I am firmly convinced that it is but in its infancy. The study of human nature enters largely into its success or failure. It must be realized that to sell goods to, let us say, a quarter of a million different individuals through the medium of printers' ink requires on the part of the mail order man, first of all, honesty of purpose and forceful and attractive descriptions, such as will beget the confidence of the average buyer.

This business is largely cash, which speaks volumes for the confidence in which this class of florists is held, when of the needs of the people we shall have a parcels post system that will mean more to the business interests of the country than any contemplated legislation that I know of at this time. No measure that we can endorse will so advance the mutual interests of both buyer and seller as the enactment of a parcels post system similar to that in vogue in that is almost akin to the salary of the president of a modern life insurance company.

First of all, having grown his stock, the next move is to determine how much will be safe to invest in selling it. I am told that the gentlemen who construct the modern greenhouses of today are diligent in the prosecution of their we realize that the flower buyers of the country intrust to their keeping annually certainly not less than $5,000,000, and this before a dollar's worth of goods is delivered.

The time is here when closer affiliation between the mail order trade and those engaged in forcing roses for the market will redound to the advantage and welfare of this society.

Right here I would like to say that our co-operation in bringing before the public new American roses may be counted upon and I would encourage our growers to greater efforts in this department of work. The catalogue man always wants new and meritorious varieties. Heretofore he has depended very largely upon Europe for new roses and in the majority of instances these new varieties from abroad have not adapted themselves to our climate. The demand is here, and if by concentrated encouragement given new candidates for favor we increase the list of really meritorious roses, we are advancing, if I am not mistaken, one of the cardinal principles of this organization. It is to be deplored that many of us assume a harsh attitude toward the majority of our new American roses. It must be borne in mind that there is a vast difference in results to be expected from the grower of a new rose who has but a limited quantity of plants to work from and the grower who has thousands of plants from which he may select a dozen exhibition blooms.

Rugged Varieties Needed.

I might add, also, that there is an almost unlimited field for free-blooming roses that will withstand the rigors of our northern winters, so, while we are ever ready to welcome more Golden Gates, Richmonds, Queen Beatrices, Tom Fields and Miss Kate Moultons, let me urge you to keep in mind the needs of the mail order trade for hardy, rugged, free-blooming roses, adapted to the coldest parts of the country. In this class there have been few additions within recent years. There is a great field open for the hybridization of roses based for their constitution upon such classes as hybrid perpetuals and rugosas, the Wichuraiana seedlings, which are such a notable feature of this exhibition, and if our American hybridizers will work along these lines, the results will best suit the peculiarities of our varying climate and I am confident that it will be but a comparatively short time until we shall take our places as leaders in the production of new and useful roses.

SOLUBLE FERTILIZERS.

[A paper by D. M. Pray read before the American Rose Society, at Boston, March 23, 1906.]

About three-quarters of a century ago a great deal of the mystery of chemistry was cleared away by the discovery that a certain chemical substance (urea) could be made in the chemist's laboratory. Up to that time it has been supposed that this and similar substances could be made in one way only, by obscure processes within the living animal. The fact that such substances could be made from dead things, as it were, and yet be an exact counterpart of those eliminated from living animals caused a profound revolution of thought. Since that time such progress has been made that today we all but make living things from inanimate matter by "chemicals," if you will.

P. J. Lynch.

Early Water Culture.

It seems to me that a similar office for horticulture has been performed by those who, fifty years ago, first brought plants to maturity without soil, by the so-called "water-culture."

In this method, after the seed was sprouted and when it had a few roots, it was supported upright by a split cork or a convenient holder over water into which its roots hung, which contained minute amounts of plant foods in solution. In this way buckwheat, corn and oats were brought to maturity. This method of growing plants eliminates the soil, thus simplifying the whole question of essential and non-essential root-foods in plant life.

The essentials were found to be seven elementary substances, nitrogen, phosphorus, potash, lime, chlorine, iron and sulphur, and the non-essentials are soda, magnesium, silica and many others. Of the essentials only nitrogen, potash, phosphorus and lime need concern us, as there is usually enough of chlorine, iron and sulphur in most soils. Lime is found in sufficient amounts in many soils, but is sometimes added to "sweeten" the soil; i. e., to correct acidity, which may be caused by excessive moisture or acid fertilizers. As a matter of fact, we are concerned mainly with the three remaining essentials of plant life, absorbed through the roots, nitrogen, phosphorus and potash, for these are needed in large amounts and must be supplied continuously to the plant. A fertilizer having these three ingredients is termed "complete."

Not only have these facts been learned from "water-culture," but also that extremely small amounts of food, even two parts in 1,000, will abundantly sustain active life. To bear this out we could mention orchids which are fed daily with very dilute solutions whenever watered, and occasionally with a complete soluble fertilizer called "Cookson's Formula" from its originator. This chemical has demonstrated its value for years and is commonly used one part in 10,000 parts of water; note the extreme dilution.

Source of Root Foods.

As a source of nitrogen, blood, tankage, guano, all sorts of animal manures, and various commercial fertilizers are used: Soluble sources, nitrate of soda, liquid ammonia and ammonium salts, as ammonium sulphate and phosphate. For rose culture stable or cow manure is often used, and sometimes nitrate of soda, of which we shall speak later. Green manuring is sometimes used.

For phosphates the animal manures are largely used, also bone, whose phosphate of lime is very slowly given up, in fact, even bone meal requires years to obtain its full value. Super-phosphates are much used out-of-doors, but not much under glass, and not being soluble are not adapted to use in watering. None of these above mentioned are soluble or at once available. In certain stages of plant life the energy of the plant seems directed into the channels of blossoms rather than foliage. At this time phosphates and potash are demanded much more than nitrogen. The chemical, phosphate of potash, has fifty per cent phosphoric acid and thirty-three per cent of potash, and dissolves in water. Such feeding should give the needed incentive for blooming, and support well the blooms.

For potash we have the animal manures from which it can be obtained quite easily, and wood ashes. As chemicals there are the sulphate, muriate and carbonate. These chemicals are used out-of-doors mostly but indoors there are often serious objections to their use.

First Commercial Fertilizers.

About a generation ago commercial fertilizers came into use. They were more portable and durable than animal manures, and answer for farming, being composed of insoluble materials, as blood, ground or dissolved bone, tankage, and usually with some cheap soluble chemical of the list already mentioned. They are not satisfactory for rose culture even outside. Their variable composition, insolubility for tank use, often harmful ingredients, and low food value render them undesirable for bench work. Averaging perhaps fifteen per cent total plant foods, with three-quarters useless filler, they yet mark a distinct step

For this purpose manure tanks of wood or concrete are much used and the manure is dumped into the water, and generally strained before going into the watering system. This simple method gets much of the potash out, but a great deal of the valuable nitrogen and the phosphates must stay behind, not being dissolved in water.

An important question to every grower using such tanks is, "How much plant food is there in my tank water?" A chemical analysis will be of some use, but such an analysis must be made often. As ordinary stable manure may be considered to have ten pounds of nitrogen and potash each, and less than seven pounds of phosphates per ton, and so much labor is involved, the actual cost of this plant food is much greater than is expected by the grower. While these figures are general they give an idea of some value as to what may be expected. By poor treatment one-half the nitrogen may be lost, thus losing one-third of the value of the whole. If no urine is present it has only half the value of one composed of both solid and liquid ingredients. Exposure may have leached much of the value of the manure away without the knowledge of the grower.

ment could be duplicated. Even with chemical analysis the situation is only a little clearer, for liquid manure water is not available at once, and much depends upon the soil, the condition of which we are not always certain. By the use of soluble fertilizers the amount of food applied to any one bench can be known to a dot. For example, we wish to water benches with 100 gallons of water, and two pounds of food. We put the food in a bucket, see that it is completely dissolved, then throw it into the tank. To save time and bother we have made out a little card board schedule with parallel columns showing respectively depths in inches in the tank, gallons of water, and finally figures showing in pounds and ounces the proper amounts of plant foods to use for various purposes. Or soluble fertilizers may be used in conjunction with the usual manure water.

A measuring stick with light scores made at convenient distances is useful in ascertaining the exact amount of liquid in the tank. If the tank has a dead space so that liquid always remains here a blank space should be on this measuring stick, and in this way too much fertilizer for the amount of water will not be added. The grower knows exactly what he is doing, which is rather a new thing. We think that while many growers would like to use soluble fertilizers more or less they do not know just how to begin with absolute safety. They must first have some clear idea of what they are now doing before they can expect to duplicate plant foods with an immediately available fertilizer. They should consult with chemists interested in soluble fertilizers who could materially assist them. In this connection we think the government and various experiment stations have done much, and their publications are of value to the rose grower.

A word about nitrate of soda. We often hear of too much being used and consider that one pound in 100 gallons is a very strong feed. We think that one pound in 250 gallons, which is about one part in 2,000, will do for a starter.

Sweetening With Lime.

In the use of lime in tanks for sweetening it is well to bear in mind that never more than two pounds per 100 gallons will dissolve. If a creamy mixture of lime and water is desired that is a different thing, and its composition depends largely on the character of the lime.

We have said that the ordinary commercial fertilizer is a step toward the ideal one, but it lacks soluble ingredients, and often has harmful ones, and has but small amounts of plant food. An ideal "soluble fertilizer" should be entirely soluble, entirely available, non-acid, pleasant to use, of proper balance, not expensive, and as concentrated with as little bulk as possible. Such are manufactured today, having sixty per cent plant foods (the highest possible amount) with no injurious ingredients nor any useless ones. In short, we may consider these pretty nearly a perfect soluble fertilizer.

As time goes on and we have more definite information concerning the immediate needs of plant life, we have no doubt that the soluble fertilizer will be up-to-date. Owing to the lack of appreciation of their very high percentages of plant foods and their purity from towards an ideal soluble fertilizer, and away from the old disagreeable manures.

Rose soil under glass is often mixed with bone and dung (with the latter's numerous living retinue) and sometimes with lime. But to grow large, fine roses and many of them resort must be had to feeding, especially in the height of the season. While top dressing can be done by hand, the use of the watering equipment to apply soluble food is of great advantage and is fast coming into use.

To get one pound of plant food for 100 pounds of manure put into the tank is almost beyond hope.

Value of Soluble Fertilizers.

We wish to point out the great value of soluble fertilizers in tank water. Without repeated chemical analysis next to nothing is known of the water except by the appearance of plants days afterwards, and even if everything goes swimmingly it is doubtful if the same treat-cheap and often injurious ingredients, their price may appear high at first glance, but calculating their units of soluble plant food they compare favorably in price, especially with so-called natural fertilizers.

After all is said and done the bald fact remains that the only food that is of any use to the plant roots is a soluble fertilizer.

RETAILERS AND NEW ROSES.

[A paper by George Asmus, Chicago, read before the American Rose Society at Boston, March 23, 1906.]

The reader is enthusiastic on any subject in floriculture, whereby the exchanging of ideas is possible; and with that view firmly established at a very early age became a member of our noble Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. I have become affiliated with local florists' clubs, flower shows and two of the great offspring of the S. A. F., namely, the American Rose and Carnation Societies. With that feeling predominant I accepted the invitation to read this paper before this honorable body, to express the views I have upon this subject.

To handle my subject briefly and clearly I have reduced the retailers' part in the introduction of new roses into what I shall term eight reasons, as follows:

First—He should become acquainted with as many new roses as possible.

Second—He should acquaint himself with the flowering habits of new roses.

Third—He should display new varieties prominently in show windows and store.

Fourth—He should arrange with commission men or growers for regular supply of new varieties.

Fifth—He should learn the parentage or source of new varieties.

Sixth—He should interest himself in naming of new varieties.

Seventh—He should devote part of his time to horticultural societies and local florists' clubs to relate experience with new varieties.

Eighth—He should be one of a set of judges and his essays more frequent.

Buyers of Educated Class.

I will now endeavor to answer the first of above reasons why the retailer should become acquainted with new varieties. The American flower buyers are principally composed of the educated classes who are desirous of knowledge; more so when pertaining to anything new. I will cite one incident that occurred during my stay here at the recent American Carnation Society's meeting, one that struck me very forcibly.

With several others, I was visiting one of the prominent florists of this city, when a lady entered, evidently a customer, who had availed herself of the opportunity to visit the beautiful display of carnations staged in this building by America's best growers. She had with her a bloom of a new carnation, and being deeply interested in it wanted to know more about the flower, but contrary to her expectations none of the clerical force was able to give her the desired information. Luckily one of our party overheard the conversation and delighted the lady with the knowledge she had troubled herself to secure.

This led me to inquire how many of the sessions the three florists in that particular store had attended. I was surprised to hear that neither one had been to the Horticultural hall at all; and was more surprised when asked by one of the clerks (who professed fifteen years' experience), "What kind of a show have they got any way?" This to me, who had traveled 1,000 miles, was a revelation! Had he availed himself of the opportunity to become better posted on new varieties by attending the meeting he would have been able to creditably answer the lady's questions.

Retailers Need Ambition.

Surely our art is one to be proud of, and this hall this evening ought to be packed with local retailers filled with ambition and pride in their calling. The press of the whole country is evidently awakening to the great desire of the public on anything pertaining to horticulture; and we are on the eve of a great and prosperous future. Therefore it behooves the retailer as the great medium, he who meets the buyer direct, to acquaint himself with the new roses and distribute that information truly and accurately to his trade.

My second reason is: Why the retailer should acquaint himself with the flowering habits of new roses, because the flowering habits regulate the supply and the supply very often the price. He would also know when to expect the largest cut and thus be able to obtain blossoms in quantity for all occasions, as, for instance, a regular purchaser of a certain variety intends to entertain, and wants to know if she can obtain her favorite roses for that date. The confidence of the person would be strengthened by immediate knowledge.

Should Display New Varieties.

Regarding my third reason: Why the retailer should display prominently new varieties; this is very important and bears more than ordinary interest to his business. As I said before, the public is constantly looking for something new, and it is a fact also that people who are undecided as to the nature of the article they intend to purchase are often attracted by a particularly fine vase of new roses or anything new in our line, thereby causing many sales that would not otherwise have been made. Therefore, if it is the good fortune of the retailer to have at his disposal the crop of some grower who has spent his time and skill and has blessed floriculture with the fruits of his labor, the retailer should do his part, and I will venture to say that if he made a proper display and made an effort to secure the information for which he is constantly besieged, he would begin to understand why his business was so dull.

I saw displayed by a prominent florist in a very large window a vase of Catherine Mermet, at that time being new, and to the right and left not quite so prominently, its two sports, Bride and Bridesmaid. Making inquiries about results, I found that by being so advertised, many sales were made, owing to proper display. This goes to show that very often we have cooped up in our ice boxes novelties that should be continually before the public.

He should also have a good display of new roses, and by so doing he is doing the greatest service he is capable of.

George Asmus.

Regular Supplies.

Reason the fourth: Why the retailer should arrange for a regular supply of new roses, particularly varieties he displays. This was brought to my personal attention during our flower show last fall, when, as manager, I was on the lookout for material that the press would use if we were to expect help to promote our interests in the local papers. One of our growers had a new rose which he intended naming and, as he had had some unsatisfactory experience in the past owing to names given to roses, he was very desirous of getting the right name for this particular variety and finally decided upon naming it after the bride of one of Chicago's prominent business men. The press immediately took hold of this subject and gave it much prominence by displaying cuts of the rose and the lady it was named after, also mentioning the grower and publishing information given by him.

Previous to this press talk a few retailers in our city had this same rose in stock in such quantities as were available; but reports did not show that there was a notable demand for it. Now, however, note the change! The statement of the manager of the establishment where the rose was grown was that from thirty to forty telephone calls a day was a moderate estimate, to say nothing of the calls at the local retail stores by people wishing to know where the rose could be seen and purchased.

Naturally there was a scarcity owing to the demand, also owing to the usual methods employed by the grower in securing all the wood available for cut-

Advertising Value of New Rose.

It would be well to state here the worth of new roses as an advertising medium for flower shows. This was brought home to me very forcibly at our show where I established a bureau of information, clerks in charge being overrun with inquiries regarding the location of new varieties advertised.

As to reason five, Why the retailer should learn the parentage or source of new varieties: Because it pertains to his business. When talking with the trade the impression left by the knowledge of new varieties cannot help but do good. Very often people are glad to receive such information and do not hesitate to tell others; at the same time it adds to the prestige of the party giving the information. It is also a help in properly displaying new varieties and correctly informing the public. The choicest vase of roses can be given 100 per cent more publicity in the window by simple and truthful description.

Naming New Varieties.

Reason six: Why the retailer should interest himself in the naming of new varieties. The grower should deliberate very carefully before naming a new rose. While undoubtedly it is a great pleasure to name a rose after a dear friend or a member of one's own family it is not very often the practical way. For after all we are merchants who are fortunate to have one of the Creator's beauties to deal with.

If flower buyers would rather purchase the Alice Roosevelt rose than the same rose named Uncle John or Uncle Bill, let us give them what they want and strolling along Fifth avenue I saw quite a throng of people stop and admire three vases of roses prominently displayed in a show case in front of one of New York's large flower stores. My curiosity being aroused I investigated and found the beautiful Richmond rose adorned with a small placard announcing same as the Mme. Sembrich, Uncle John as Mme. Eames; and still another rose the variety of which I was ignorant, as Mme. Melba. That being grand opera week I was informed by the exhibitor that they could insure the sale of many more roses by tricking the public. I myself do not approve of that scheme; far the reverse, and I did not hesitate to tell my informant so. But here was food for thought. If it was of so much value to name the rose Mme. Eames, or whatever the name might be, to increase the sales, why should not the retailer who meets the purchaser and knows the value of a name be consulted and his advice listened to?

Time for Club Meetings.

Reason seven, Why he should devote part of his time to horticultural societies and local florists' clubs to relate experiences with new varieties: My answer to other reasons covers this somewhat. But the fact of the good derived from rubbing elbows with all branches of our business was brought home to me during a recent visit to Dayton, O. While taking lunch at the officers' club on the National Cash Register Co.'s grounds, where the heads of different departments lunch and spend the noon hour, I noted that the greater purport of the conversation was upon their work. I was informed that some of the brightest ideas originate in that recreative hour. Thus it should be at our club meetings. The retail employer should see that his help belongs to local organizations, and there, if anywhere, the rose grower is sure to bring his new variety. Discussions on the merits of the same might take place and the grower could get such information as he may need and wish. It wants the closer affiliation of the grower and retailer to help both in their business.

Popularity of Mme. Chatenay.

It was at one of these meetings in our city that a Chicago grower displayed a vase of the Mme. Abel Chatenay in first-class condition. The rose had been partly condemned by some of the retailers who had not seen it at its best. The roses so impressed one of our prominent retailers at that meeting, and he was so interested, that his purchases and the demand he caused no doubt was responsible for part of the great popularity of this rose in our city.

Reason eight, Why the retailer should be one of a set of judges and his essays more frequent: By so doing he would come in touch with the local dealer and get his ideas on his wants in the way of supplies for certain seasons and the colors mostly desired. It seems to me, also, that essays would be one of the ways his ideas could be ventilated. By making him one of a set of judges the commercial view of the new roses could be better had.

I will now close, trusting that I have conveyed to you clearly my views on the retailers' part in the introduction of new roses.

tings as soon as he found out he had a winner. The retailer would be apt to think that the variety has been exterminated were it not for the glittering advertisements in the trade papers. I sometimes think there are growers who do not sleep nights but go prowling around with a lantern in their greenhouses looking for new cuttings; therefore the retailers had better arrange for a regular supply of new roses before advertising too strongly. A regular supply of any item is needed if a trade is to be worked up.

OLD-FASHIONED BOUQUETS.

We are required, almost in spite of ourselves, to make old-fashioned bouquets for favors, prizes, etc., these days, and since do it we must, let the product be somewhat modernized. A bunch of violets with a border of white carnations, finished with a smart chiffon bow close under the flowers and spread out flat after the style of a bouquet holder or frilled around, is barely admissible. The best that can be said about a rose bobbing up through the center of a bunch of violets is that it is saucy and cute.

Blue and white is called for once in a while and is difficult to supply in flowers, cinerarias and Dutch hyacinths being about the only available material at this season. For centerpieces or basket work use the plants in among the cut flowers. A blue cineraria or Dutch hyacinth finds an excellent setting in a group of narcissi, white or yellow.

To help out the lack of blue flowers have in stock some blue ribbon and baskets. The adjustable kind for table decoration can be had in a soft blue. Fill with lily of the valley and adiantum. Under the baskets on the table stretch a band of sash ribbon to match the basket, and embroider the ends with a few sprays of valley scattered among, not on top of, some of the adiantum.

Lasting Centerpieces.

One often has calls for a centerpiece which will last for two affairs, and, to present as good an appearance the second day as the first, should be made of plants. A pink and green piece contained a large pan of light pink Dutch hyacinths for a center and adiantum plants removed from the pots banked around and tipped perceptibly towards the outside edge. An ordinary wire centerpiece was used, lined with two plies of foil inside and covered on the outside with another thickness to prevent any scratching of a polished table. Sphagnum was packed closely around the plants to hold in place. Adiantums were tipped far enough out to allow the lower fronds to rest upon the table. Any spots between the plants showing sphagnum were covered with common ferns laid flat and well sprinkled. If gleams of tin foil appear among the green, run a thin string of smilax around the edge under the fern fronds.

THE IDEAL SALESMAN.

[An essay by Anna G. Sawyer, with J. M. Smely, Aurora, Ill., submitted in the recent prize competition.]

There is scarcely a business opening today that does not present an overcrowded condition to young people launching out in life. In view of this fact, there is only one way to be master of the situation, that is to be master of your profession, be ideal. If one plans to be a stenographer, a teacher, a pharmacy clerk or architect, he says to himself: "That means a college education, but if I take that job up at the florist's, why, I can sell carnations and geraniums without any training!"

This common opinion is decidedly a narrow view of the broad scope of usefulness which comes within the range of the ideal salesman or saleswoman, the one who can prove his or her invaluable worth to the employer. The mere quoting of prices, the cut short "yes" and "no," "haven't got them," "out of season," are too often evidences of the untrained and unskilled clerk. One must be thoroughly grounded in good business principles and must have a thorough knowledge of mankind in general in order to meet the customers' varied fancies and "notions" with perfect courtesy and business tact.

In the first place, one should have served out his apprenticeship, learning the details of the business "from A to Z" in a model establishment, where strict rules of promptness and economy, neatness and order are practiced until they become infallible traits by force of habit. Cultivate the taste for floral arrangement and practice it at every opportunity. Meantime a business course must come in, if it has to be taken nights, for a knowledge of commercial law and bookkeeping is bound to prove helpful. Regarding the relations between the employer and his ideal helper, there should be in the first place, confidence, which means on the one hand respect, and on the other, the trust of your employer that no matter what the case may be, in his presence or absence, you will spare no effort to give his customers as well as himself, fair, square dealing.

It is to be hoped that the employer has learned that it does not pay, in fact is a poor investment, to require excess of work or too long hours, both of which unfit you for enthusiastic and high grade work, in which you can be a credit both to your employer and yourself.

There should be a concise understanding of your duties and obligations, of the time schedule and overpay for over hours. Varying circumstances must alter the conditions in different situations, but the more definite the rules can be, the less likely to create friction which may end in serious trouble. In cases of misunderstanding rather talk the matter over with the employer than allow a wrong to smoulder into bitterness. Cultivate the happy faculty of getting on with everyone about you. Remember you have your own peculiarities, so don't criticise them in others. Be the peace-maker, rather than the fault-finder—it's much pleasanter and quite as easy if you will just fall into the habit.

I trust no one will impute egotism to our sex if I assert that a lady may prove her excellent worth in the flower store. The most important features of the work appeal strongly to her natural sense of the beautiful and artistic, while she has the patience and devotion to work out the thing in hand to its perfection. A bit of style, a dainty touch here and there, give evidence of her pres-

THE IDEAL SALESMAN.

[An essay by Anna G. Sawyer, with J. M. Smely, Aurora, Ill., submitted in the recent prize competition.]

There is scarcely a business opening today that does not present an over-crowded condition to young people launching out in life. In view of this fact, there is only one way to be master of the situation, that is to be master of your profession, be ideal. If one plans to be a stenographer, a teacher, a pharmacy clerk or architect, he says to himself: "That means a college education, but if I take that job up at the florist's, why, I can sell carnations and geraniums without any training!"

In the first place, one should have served out his apprenticeship, learning the details of the business "from A to Z" in a model establishment, where strict rules of promptness and economy, neatness and order are practiced until they become infallible traits by force of habit. Cultivate the taste for floral arrangement and practice it at every opportunity. It is to be hoped that the employer has learned that it does not pay, in fact is a poor investment, to require excess of work or too long hours, both of which unfit you for enthusiastic and high grade work, in which you can be a credit both to your employer and yourself.

There should be a concise understanding of your duties and obligations, of the time schedule and overpay for over hours. In cases of misunderstanding, rather talk the matter over with the employer than allow a wrong to smoulder into bitterness. Cultivate the happy faculty of getting on with everyone about you. Remember you have your own peculiarities, so don't criticize them in others. Be the peacemaker rather than the fault-finder. It's much pleasanter and quite as easy if you will just fall into the habit.

I trust no one will impute egotism to our sex if I assert that a lady may prove her excellent worth in the flower store. The most important features of the work appeal strongly to her natural sense of the beautiful and artistic, while she has the patience and devotion to work out the thing in hand to its perfection. A bit of style and dainty touch here and there, give evidence of her presence. However, this natural trait counts for little unless there comes with it knowledge and understanding of plants and flowers. Your high school course in botany should prove a good foundation for intelligent reading and investigation along the line of commercial plants. Especially should you be informed as to the care of palms and ferns and all house and bedding plants, in order to answer the daily queries of your customers. Make it your aim not only to give definite and practical suggestions regarding their keeping but leave the impression that you are entrusting to their care a cherished plant, a spark of sacred life, not to be neglected and starved for want of water and sunshine and a shower bath. A dying plant discourages the buyer and reflects upon the florist.

Be a constant reader of the trade papers that you may keep in touch with the supply and demand, may anticipate each flower in its season and be able to suggest it to the perplexed customer trying to plan for a coming decoration. "Why, we shall have pond lilies for you by next week and they would do finely arranged in the hanging vases with Sprenger sprays. Yes? How many dozen, please?"

Another point with your customer—by all means be resourceful. Pardon a personal reference, but I recall an instance when, in hopeless February, by scurrying around under benches and in neglected corners, I found some clover blossoms and a dandelion for an artist which secured for my employer a new and very profitable customer.

Again, if they know not what they want, suggest that which you need to sell—for we handle perishable goods. If they know what they want, and you are out, be convincing that you have something better, a prettier shade, a stronger stem, less common, or more lasting.

In taking orders for funeral flowers, you will try to find out about the price the party had in mind and work up from that with the assurance that the higher the price the better pleased they will be with your efforts. Break away from the ordinary, by novel touches—try the soft green of a Mme. Salleroi plant in the base of a wreath of pink roses; or a groundwork of Alternanthera aurea for a blending background for white roses; use a cluster of wolf-berries in season. Large bouquets of red cannas and white roses with leaves of cypress and with a few Pierisoni fronds, are striking and showy. Suggest as a gift to a young mother and babe, a basket of the Baby Rambler rose with maidenhair ferns and full clusters of baby ribbon caught on the handle and among the ferns.

A tasteful and attractive window is one of the everyday requisites; it should be the herald to every passerby of each flower and plant in its season. Especially for all holidays should your window be in its unique glory. In house and dinner decorations you have large opportunity to exert your wits and ingenuity. Strive to be as original and clever in executing your decoration as is McCutcheon in his drawings. Keep a note book and add hints and ideas to it daily, from your reading and observation, and it will be found very suggestive when the call comes. Search the woods for their native greens and flowers and make use of their wild beauty, which too often fades unseen.

Keep in as close touch as possible with all customers and many of them will become your friends and feel from past experience that they are unable to carry out the "function" without your timely assistance. On the subject of flowers you have a right to be an enthusiast; it is your hobby—no one has a better.

begin drawing water as soon as placed in water.

Put in Deep Vases.

Both of the above varieties will develop fine in water even if picked when only half open. Most varieties will do the same, but a few will not, so be on the safe side and pick when the petals are unfolded. Place them in vases that are deep enough to hold them up straight. If the stems are strong they need not be very deep, but if the stems are not strong enough to hold the blooms up straight you can use a contrivance we sometimes use here to good advantage. Make a wire ring just large enough to fit into the bottom of your vase and another one about eighteen inches across. Run three tolerably heavy and strong wires about eighteen to twenty-one inches long from the one to the other. Set this in your vase and let the blooms rest against the upper wire. Your stems should be strong enough not to need this, but that does not say that they always are, and occasionally we do find it necessary to use this contrivance.

Shading.

Some growers put a light shade on the glass to prevent this bleaching on bright days. While it accomplishes the result desired, yet I do not approve of it for other reasons. During March and April the plants make what we usually term their spring growth, which is very rank when the soil has not been allowed to become exhausted. Unless the plants have plenty of sunlight, and, in fact, the full sun, this growth is very apt to be soft, and when hot weather comes the plants become exhausted much quicker than they will if given the full sun and the growth is more matured. Of course if you are ready to throw your plants out in May it will make little difference whether they are exhausted or not, and if a little shade will help your crop now, by all means apply it. Many of us, however, cut a good crop through June and early July at a good profit, and it pays us to keep up our carnations until asters arrive.

If you apply any shade, be sure it is light; just enough to break the strength of the sun is all you want and it will not take much for that. There will come days at a time when you will wish you did not have any on at all.

Mr. Osborn covered the subject of topping the young plants well in a recent article, and I need not add anything to it, except that I never considered it necessary to use a knife in the operation. If you want to use a knife, well and good; it will do no harm, but I have always held that when the stem will snap off as easily and as clean as carnations do a knife is not necessary. It should be a clean break, however, without leaving any bruise or tear and the best time to do it is on a cloudy day.

Time to Repot.

I will say, too, that if you potted up early cuttings in small pots in January or early February now is the time to repot them into 2½-inch or 3-inch pots, according to what they are in now. Don't let appearances deceive you. They may look fine and thrifty now and that is all the more reason why you want to keep them so. If you dump one out of the pot you will find the ball a mass of roots. Next month when warm weather sets in they will dry out rapidly and the plants will become stunted if

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Care of Young Stock.

During the past few weeks we have had ideal weather for propagating, cold and cloudy, and those cuttings you put in late last month ought to have rooted fine, or at least be past the dangerous point. They will make fine stock and if handled properly until they have taken hold in the pots they will in many cases prove more satisfactory than the earlier ones. When potting them be sure you shade them close for a few days, especially if the sun is shining. The sun is getting quite strong now and a few hours of it on a cutting that has no root hold will wilt it beyond recuperation. I have also repeatedly cautioned you against draughts, and I want to reiterate that nothing will ruin a young cutting quicker. So be sure to drop your curtain and cover them as soon as you open the ventilators. This covering will be found much more effective than spraying.

Cutting the Blooms.

Your blooming plants, too, will call for a little extra attention on account of the stronger sunlight. During the winter months you can cut your blooms at your convenience or as they are needed, allowing them to develop on the plants to the stage at which you want to use them. Now, however, you can not do this. Not only must they be cut early in the morning or late in the afternoon, but most varieties should not be exposed to a day's hot sun after they have unfolded their petals. The white varieties, of course, are excepted, as they will only get whiter, but Mrs. Lawson bleaches badly and should be picked in the morning and every bloom that has its petals unfolded should be picked. Enchantress, too, should be kept picked close and should be picked in the morning. If you pick them close in the morning there will be no need of picking any in the evening. The morning is the best time to gather them, anyway, because most of the unfolding is done in the early morning hours and at that time the blooms are crisp and fresh and will that happens repeatedly, and it will happen in spite of your resolutions to prevent. The only way to prevent it is to repot them and thereby not only keep the plants in good condition but at the same time add to their strength and size. Don't forget that these are your next season's stock. A. F. J. BAUR.

THE LOUISE NAUMANN.

We take pleasure in writing in reference to the Louise Naumann carnation. It is one that G. M. Naumann, of Cleveland, introduced and we think it one of the best commercial bloomers on the market today, as it is very free and never bursts and grows on very strong, wiry stems that hold the flower well. It can be planted 9x9 inches and be run very cool, around 45 degrees to 48 degrees. More heat won't hurt it. It is the greatest carnation for wear and tear we ever saw. When we purchased stock from the originator we formed an opinion as to what it was going to be and are glad to say it has proven fine. The size is about three inches or so and the color about like Joost and beautifully fringed and we think it will be quite a few days before a carnation will come and pass this for a payer.

A. LAUB & SON.

BOSTON MARKET.

We should like to have an opinion of the Boston Market carnation for growers who produce a general stock for retail trade. L. N. B.

There is considerable difference of opinion about the merits of Carnation Boston Market. We have grown it for three years and have steadily increased the area of bench space devoted to Boston Market. It is not of largest size and would stand no show against Lady Bountiful at an exhibition of cut blooms, but its good qualities are that it is one of the very earliest of bloomers. It has yielded up to date this season as many blooms per plant as Lawson. It is free of all disease and is a great keeper. It is not a variety that will pay for or needs any special treatment. We have found the middle of August the best time to lift it from the field. From the first of April to midsummer it will run away in production from almost any carnation we grow. Altogether we consider it a first-class variety, especially for those who do not consider themselves experts or specialists. W. S.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

President-elect John H. Dunlop, of Toronto, Ont., has so aroused the enthusiasm of the inhabitants and officials of his city that every obstacle that might prove an inconvenience to the members and exhibitors who will attend the meeting next January in Toronto has been removed and there will be less trouble in getting stock to this show than in the larger cities of the United States.

Anything now that bears the stamp of this society goes through without any delay, and it is a safe prediction to say that when it comes to the week of the meeting stock will be rushed through from Suspension Bridge to the exhibition hall with a dispatch and care that will make the people on this side want all of our meetings held in Toronto.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Caladium Esculentum.

Since the great popularity of subtropical gardening, which is so suitable for our summer climate, especially where water can be supplied in abundance, the big green leaves of Caladium esculentum are most useful. It is such a strong rooting plant that it should be sparingly used in window boxes or vases, for it will rob everything that grows near it. It is now time to start it.

If the bulbs are potted in soil in 5-inch or 6-inch pots, they are slow to start and take up necessary room. Make a mixture of rotten manure, sand and loam, or any compost that is light and friable, and with this fill flats of three inches depth. Squeeze the bulbs in half their depth and place the flats over the hot-water pipes. In a very few days every bulb will have sent out an abundance of roots, as well as started to make leaf growth, and then when put into 5-inch or 6-inch pots and kept continually light and warm you will have robust plants that will not blow into shreds or burn up with the sun.

It is a coarse, easily grown plant, but the demand increases every year and, although by size of plant when sold, the price seems cheap, they occupy the benches but a very short time and therefore are profitable.

Economy of Bench Space.

This is a point of great importance. How long does a crop occupy a bench? Take the chrysanthemum, which, under the most skilful and successful management, gives only a small net return, yet not occupying much room until June, and again disappearing by the end of November. The benches are filled up immediately with lilies, azaleas and other spring flowering crops. Now if the showy mum did not flower until March or April, it would be very certain that the fewer you grew the better you would be off. The rose and carnation occupy the benches the entire year and with an interval of a few months there should be a continuous income.

The profits of your houses depend entirely on how quickly one crop succeeds another, or on how short a time the benches are occupied. Every square foot must return a profit. If not, it surely diminishes the profit of another that would be profitable. I can well remember, twenty years ago, that we became nervous or fretty, and if there were twenty lineal feet of bench room empty I thought we were facing disaster.

The present thought is not about a bench actually vacant, but are they filled profitably? Have you had a certain crop unnecessarily long on the benches? Are there not many things that will for a while take a back seat and remain only a short time on the most favorable place? All this is the very essence of good gardening.

We can't all be in the same line of business, and some branches may be more profitable and easy than others;

yet I notice that the expert managers of flowering plants for the different seasons, such as W. K. Harris, of Philadelphia, or Wm. Edgar, of Boston, are just as prosperous as the specialists on roses or carnations, however expert they may be.

Managing Mixed Collections.

There is one thing sure. To manage a mixed collection of plants for a certain date and have them right for the market in the best of shape and condition needs much more ability, thought and labor than the growing of roses or carnations. Less thought and labor may appeal to some as an advantage. The plantsman of varied experience and success must exercise his intellect far more than the specialist, who, once he has mastered his specialty, finds a sameness and monotony growing over him. It appears to me that, although you may never grow physically an eighth of an inch after maturity—in fact, the reverse—the brain goes on developing long after the physical man stops. Brain exercise, therefore, is needed, and if it is not received through a useful and healthy channel it will turn to frivolity and vice. Certain it is, our large flower factories are turning out dozens of young men who have had experience in roses and carnations, who think they are perfect in their specialties, yet how few there are who feel capable of growing and managing a place where plants in their season must be produced.

I have purposely wandered away from the original subject, economy of space, and I wish to impress upon you, young man, that he who can handle crop after crop on his benches throughout the year will be the successful man.

Renaissance of the Tuberose.

We will now return to practical gardening. The sweet tuberose has for years been under a cloud. We all know why. Thirty years ago it was used to excess in all kinds of funeral designs, and when the tide turned susceptible people pretended to hate the sweet blossom and said its odor reminded them of a corpse. We are no judge of that, having no experience with the latter only in the shape of a cat or rat.

We shall always remember C. W. Ward's famous dead cat which passed from this wicked world because too much hydrocyanic acid gas was in the house, but Mr. Ward blamed the resulting odor on the use of punk for fumigating. The real cause of this feline's demise was a broken heart at seeing its owner spend so much money on sub-watering. Although the cat was a martyr to the explorations of science, Mr. Ward survives and is a splendid example of a man who is willing to spend his money that others may profit by it. We glory in his achieved success.

Like other plants of which I have lately written, much space can be saved, also time, by placing the tuberose bulbs in flats of an inch of light loam and old hotbed manure, with two inches of sand over it. You can place the bulbs quite thickly, about two-thirds their depth. If placed a few inches above some mild hot-water pipes they will soon start, and must then be potted off singly.

We have considerable demand in May for tuberose for the mixed border. For this we pot the bulbs from the flats into 4-inch pots and plunge in a mild hotbed or a light, warm house. About the first of June they are planted out in the open ground.

If grown for cutting, a 4-inch pot is scarcely large enough. They deserve 5-inch, or better still, can be planted out on a bench in four or five inches of fresh loam. I suppose in warmer regions the mature bulbs can be planted out and fine spikes result. We have always lived too near the north pole to know of this experience.

America, or more correctly, the United States of America, is the great producing country of the tuberose. We can remember well when British seedsmen always sent to Italy for them, and it was more fuss and trouble to procure a hundred tuberose bulbs than it would be nowadays to get a baby chimpanzee from the Congo valley or an essay on astronomy from one of the learned inhabitants of Mars.

Sowing Sweet Peas.

Where frost and snow have passed away and the ground can be ploughed or dug, the very first job out of doors is to sow sweet peas. Make the trench deep and broad and sow thinly. You need not at once fill in the trench full. Future hoeing will do that. The ground cannot be too rich for sweet peas. There would be little gained by sowing any of the early, winter-flowering kinds outdoors. Blanche Burpee, Emily Henderson, Countess of Radnor, Lovely, Catherine Tracy, or any of the good old standard varieties will do.

We are asked every spring at the bedding season for clumps of sweet peas, and the only way to fill the order is to dig up clumps from the rows sown in the garden. Last year we sowed several hundred 4-inch pots with a dozen seeds in each, and found use for them to fill these orders, and charged as much for them as for 4-inch geraniums and at a greater profit. The middle of April is early enough to sow in the north.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

There is some talk of a society being formed in Scotland similar to the Royal Horticultural Society of England, with headquarters at Edinburgh. It is rightly asserted by the leading horticultural authorities of Scotland that the once magnificent exhibitions of horticultural productions do not now pay in Scotland. Something in the way of a society planned on the lines of the R. H. S. is required to revive interest in flowers and fruit culture. It will probably surprise our friends in America to learn that the Royal Horticultural Society has now reached a membership of nearly 10,000, and that it has a reserve fund of about £16,000.

prices. Much money must have been lost. In many cases the plants, after having been imported, potted, housed and grown and forced into bloom, are not realizing the actual first cost of the plants on the continent. It is probable orders for the importations of azaleas will be cut down very considerably by the English nurserymen the coming season.

Dutch daffodils and tulips have been doing well on the market lately, a great improvement having taken place in prices. The last week or so both articles have been making sufficient to leave a good profit for the grower, which is very different to what they did at the beginning and towards the middle of the season.

Chrysanthemums during the past autumn and winter have been a profitable line, the blooms selling well throughout the season. The mild autumn and winter gave an excellent chance of getting the bloom and growth well matured, and in fine condition for housing, and nearly all growers are well pleased with the results. Considerable damage was done in some nurseries by early frosts, one Lancashire grower estimating his loss in a single night from frost at over £500. At one time it looked as if the chrysanthemum would be hopelessly overdone. Probably larger quantities than ever before were grown for last winter's trade. In some districts they were grown by the acre. Around Nottingham especially it was no uncommon sight to see five or six acres together in one nursery for lifting, blooming under glass. Next season probably will be a record for quantity grown. I never remember seeing so many plants for cut blooms being propagated as there are this spring. B. J.

HYDROCYANIC ACID GAS.

Nearly every owner of a greenhouse is interested in fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas and many hundreds are experimenting in its use. It is necessary in every case to determine with great care the cubic contents of the house, frame or box in which the fumigation is to be made. The illustration shows cross sections of two styles of greenhouse structures now in general use. At the left is an even-span house 12x100 feet, two feet on the sides, and five feet six inches from the surface of the beds to the ridge, with a walk fourteen inches wide and fifteen inches deep.

To determine accurately the number of cubic feet in this or a house of similar construction: First, make a rough drawing showing a cross section of the house; second, divide the space into triangles and rectangles by drawing a line connecting the two wall plates and one from the ridge at right angles to this; mark on each its respective length in feet and inches. Compute the number of cubic feet in each of the rectangles and triangles in accordance with the following method:

In the even span house shown at the left the number of cubic feet of space in the walk is found by multiplying the width by the depth by the length, thus: Multiply one foot two inches by one foot three inches by 100 feet. Reducing to inches we have fourteen inches multiplied by fifteen inches by 1,200 inches equals 252,000 cubic inches; dividing this result by 1,728, the number of cubic inches contained in a cubic foot, we have 145.83 cubic feet. The rectangle A D G F is computed in the same way, except that in this case it is not necessary to reduce the feet to inches. It would be twelve feet multiplied by two feet by 100 feet equals 2,400 cubic feet.

This brings us to the triangles. The rule generally given for calculating the area of a right-angle triangle is to multiply the base by the perpendicular and divide the product by two. The result multiplied by the length of the house will give the number of cubic feet the triangular portion contains. For example, taking the triangle A C E; six feet multiplied by three feet six inches, equals twenty-one feet, divided by two equals 10.5 feet, multiplied by 100 feet equals 1,050 cubic feet. The area of the triangle E C D and the cubic feet in this part of the house are determined in the same way; or, in this case, since the triangles are equal, the desired result is obtained by multiplying the number of cubic feet in the triangle A C E by two; 1,050 multiplied by two equals 2,100 cubic feet. The contents of this house is therefore 145.83 plus 2,400 plus 2,100 equals 4,645.83 cubic feet; this result multiplied by the required dose per cubic foot of space will give the amount of cyanide of potassium necessary for one fumigation.

Illustration of Method of Calculating Cubic Contents of Greenhouses.

At the right of the illustration is a cross section of a three-quarter span house 18x100 feet, front wall four feet four inches, back wall six feet four inches, and eleven feet ten inches to the ridge. The cubic contents of this house is determined in the same manner, except that the two triangles being unequal, each one will have to be calculated separately. The house contains 15,050 cubic feet. It will thus be seen that the cubic contents of a house or frame or any style can be readily determined by simply dividing a cross section of the same into the necessary number of triangles and rectangles and calculating as demonstrated above.

After the number of cubic feet in the space to be fumigated is determined, the amount of cyanide required is found by multiplying the cubic contents by the dose per cubic foot. For example, if single violets are to be fumigated the dose would be one-tenth of a gram per cubic foot. A dose, therefore, for the even span house, containing 4,646 cubic feet would be 4,646 multiplied by .1 equals 464.6 grams. To reduce this to ounces, divide the number of grams by 28.35, the number of grams in an ounce avoirdupois. It is found that 464.6 divided by 28.35 equals 16.38 ounces avoirdupois. It may be necessary to reduce the fraction of ounces to grains; 437.5, the number of grains in an ounce, multiplied by .38 equals 166 grains.

If double violets are to be fumigated the cubic contents would be multiplied by .15 thus: 4,646 multiplied by .15 equals 696.9 grams, divided by 28.35 equals 24.58 ounces avoirdupois. Fifty-eight one-hundredths of an ounce equals 253 grains. In the case of a small space of less than 150 cubic feet the dose in grams should first be determined, and this, if necessary, can be changed to grains by multiplying the number of grams by 15.43, grains in a gram, thus: thirty cubic feet multiplied by .15 gram equals 4.5 grams, multiplied by 15.43 equals 69.435 grains, or approximately 69.5 grains. The reduction to ounces or grains will not be necessary if metric weights are used, which is strongly urged.

When the dose for certain plants in a given house, frame or box is once obtained it should be carefully recorded on the house or box thus:

Contents 1,015 cubic feet, dose for ferns, .075 gram per cubic foot, equals 76.1 grams; for violets, double, at .15 gram per cubic foot, equals 152.25 grams.

If a scale weighing with avoirdupois weights is used the dose should be recorded in ounces and grains.

HENRY WEHRMAN'S PLACE.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph taken at the establishment of Henry Wehrman, Maywood, Ill. Carnations are the principal crop in the two houses, but sweet peas are grown, a few being marketed all winter, with a good crop in the spring. Enchantress is the principal variety of carnation this season, but Genevieve Lord is still grown here, for Mr. Wehrman has better success with it than almost any grower for the Chicago market. Each spring his crop of Genevieve Lord is something for other growers to marvel at.

Next door to Mr. Wehrman, the houses showing slightly in the illustration, is the new place of Wm. Collatz, built in 1905. There are two long houses devoted to carnations, the varieties being Enchantress, Genevieve Lord, Lady Bountiful and one or two others. Both growers ship to E. C. Amling.

With the Advertising Man

When you get right down to facts, the real and only object of a retail florists' "ad" is to sell goods—and lots of them. Unless an "ad" does this, it goes wide of the mark.

While it is only human for a man to like to see his name in print, can you or any other retailer afford to pay good solid cash for this sole purpose? I think not.

Then the question naturally arises, what is an advertisement and how should it be written in order to produce the best results?

In the first place an "ad" is your salesman and if properly written can talk more convincingly and sell more goods than any six men, no matter how smooth or how skilful they may be.

An "ad" must say something; it must speak for you, tell your auditors what you have to sell and why they should buy from you in preference to anyone else. An "ad" that does all these things will bring the prospective customers into your store or greenhouse with every confidence in the world that they are going to get a square deal. After that, it's up to you to hold your customers.

Just the same as a truly successful business man must have character and individuality, so must your advertising have all those sterling qualities; individuality, character, personality—in order to make your advertising successful.

The trouble with most advertising is that it is too stiff. If you have something good, tell your readers about it, no matter whether it is your flowers, way of doing business, prompt delivery system, or whatever it may be. Give them plain, straight talk that you know they will understand without effort.

MAUVE FLOWERS.

Among flowers of mauve tint one of the most useful for cutting is Scabiosa Caucasica. The flowers are of a pretty shade of color, and last well in a cut state, and when cut as they open a succession is kept for a considerable time longer than when they are left on the plants. In raising seedlings some variations will be found, and by careful selection improvements may be made which can be propagated by division. One grower in the south tells me that he has a selected variety which he has grown for several years, and has found it very profitable. It may not be wanted in large quantities, yet there is now so much demand for flowers of this shade of color that when done well and packed carefully they will make a fair price and sell readily.

I believe many of our hardy flowers would command more attention and make better prices if more attention were paid to bunching and packing; there is also a great advantage in making careful selections from year to year. Those who grow for market have the advantage over others who retail plants, and have customers who always want to select the best. I may add that although this scabiosa will grow in any soil, it will pay to plant it in rich, loamy, well manured ground.—Horticultural Advertiser.

It may not be wanted in large quantities, yet it meets such a much demand for flowers of this shade of color that it will be well to raise and carefully they will make a fair price and sell readily.

I believe many of our best flowers would command more attention and make better prices if more attention were paid to breeding and perfecting; there is also a great advantage in making careful selections from year to year. Those who grow for market have the advantage over others who retail plants, and have customers who always want to select the best. I may add that this scabiosa will grow in any soil, will pay to plant it in rich, loamy, well-manured ground.—Horticultural Advertiser.

ERIE, PA.—E. C. Hill has worked up a stock of 25,000 plants of his new geranium, Ora D. Hill. He will require 15,000 in 4-inch pots for his local trade this spring.

FLUSHING, N. Y.—Wm. T. James has for years been raising seedling carnations and has a cerise pink of great size with non-bursting calyx which is attracting much attention.

SANFORD, N. C.—M. J. McPhail, who has been with J. L. O'Quinn & Co., Raleigh, N. C., for six years, will build houses here and start in business for himself. He plans to start May 1.

LYCHNIS SARTORI.

This new lychnis was in bloom here last year, says a correspondent from Dumfries, Scotland, but I cannot find any mention of it in my books of reference. It, however, came to me through the medium of Max Leichtlin, of Baden Baden, so that I believe it is correctly named. It reminds one somewhat in its flowers of Lychnis diurna, but it has narrower and more lanceolate leaves. The flowers are of a somewhat similar color of purple, but the inflated calyx is more elongated. The blooms have been about half an inch across, and the whole plant is about nine inches high. It will probably give larger flowers, and be a little taller when planted in the open ground; my specimen having been grown in a pot and in a cold frame, with plenty of air during the day. On first opening the flowers droop, but afterwards become almost horizontal, and eventually quite erect. It is, I believe, a native of China, and although likely to be viewed with interest by many, it will not, I think, take a high place as a garden plant, although by another year it will show its true character better.

GRAND RAPIDS LETTUCE.

For the past two seasons we have experienced considerable trouble in getting the seed of this variety to come up freely. The seed seems to be fresh, though not quite so plump and well filled as we would like to see it, probably due to improper ripening through unfavorable weather or some such cause. In sowing lettuce we make a practice of covering the seed to about its own depth with soil and in former years have experienced no more trouble in getting Grand Rapids up than other varieties, but the only way we seem to have success with it now is to sow it on top of the ground, giving no more covering than the little that is washed over the seed when watered with a rather heavy hose. In this way it germinates fairly well and, since adopting this plan, we have experienced little trouble in keeping up a supply, but when covered the seed germinates very slowly and quite a large percentage never comes up.

We are coming to rely on Grand Rapids as a standard variety more and more every year. There was a time when head lettuce was all the demand, other kinds being taken only when head lettuce could not be got; but now, the tender quality of the Grand Rapids being recognized, it sells quite readily in most markets and its freedom of growth and freedom from disease makes it a very profitable variety for the grower. It is, in fact, the only variety that can be grown with any certainty of success where the crop has to be grown on raised benches. Here, varieties of the Boston Market type are sure to fall a prey to leaf burn to a greater or less extent.

We grew a variety known as Glass-house for several years, finding it resisted disease better than any of the leading varieties, but it was tough in texture and strong to the taste; hence would not meet the demand when a first-class article was called for. In the more modern houses where the lettuce is grown on the ground floor we experience little trouble in growing the head varieties, Deacon being our favorite. But in the houses with raised benches we grow Grand Rapids exclusively, and find no trouble in selling it at a remunerative price.

MUSHROOMS.

In the REVIEW for March 15, under the heading "Mushrooms Under Glass," your correspondent, H. G. W., proposes to convert some old and leaky greenhouses into mushroom houses by covering the glass with muslin or cloth treated with some waterproof solution. Tar paper has been suggested as a substitute for muslin. The use of tar paper in a mushroom house has a serious drawback; it will materially retard if not entirely check the development of the spawn, which is most sensitive to all antiseptics or disinfectants. A grower of my acquaintance used tar paper in the construction of the roof of his mushroom house and found it impossible to raise a crop in the row of beds next to the tar paper.

The use of steam for heating will enable the grower to supply to the dry winter atmosphere the necessary amount of moisture. By allowing a limited quantity of steam to escape in the house he will be able to prevent the rapid evaporation of his beds without injuring the crop by the direct application of water.

GEO. C. LAMBERT.

MECHANICAL WATERING.

Louis Wittbold, the inventor of the Wittbold watering system for greenhouses, now has an improved and perfected watering machine which will interest all greenhouse men. While all have heard of watering machines, they are by most growers deemed an impossibility, and those who have dared to experiment in that direction have received little encouragement. Nevertheless, the watering machine is now an assured success. W. B. Davis & Co., of Aurora, Ill., have taken the lead by putting the improved Wittbold system in their entire establishment of 50,000 square feet, this probably being the first greenhouse in the world watered exclusively by machines. The proprietors express themselves as entirely satisfied, stating that the watering now done perfectly in about one hour formerly required nine hours.

The Great Central Market.

The market has been in a decidedly bad way the past few days. Last week there was nothing special doing, outside of a few department store decorations and some special sales. The forepart of this week even these outlets were not available for the largely increased receipts of stock and there have been accumulations in all departments. The weather has been unfavorable to transient trade. The call for funeral work has slackened and the wholesalers are confronted with the problem of working off big cuts with no demand.

The item which seems best to hold its own is American Beauty in the longer grades. There are great quantities of short stock, hard to sell. Quality is excellent. Tea roses are very fine, but the receipts have increased so greatly that prices are weak all along the line. Of course, the best grades hold their values best; it is the shorter stock that is hard to move, but there is more choice stock than the demand will take at quoted rates. Red roses are not so largely in evidence.

The carnation market is at an even weaker stage than a week ago. It is stated that clean-up sales have been made as low as 5 cents a bunch where splits, stale stock and everything else was taken. This is by no means a market value, however, for the department store orders for special sales on Friday were shipped at around $15 per thousand. On Tuesday of this week thousand lots were quoted at $7.50. The quality is excellent, but the accumulation is still largely Mrs. Lawson, this variety being received in some houses in greater number than all other sorts combined.

Since Saturday noon, when buying practically stopped, violets have been almost immovable. Of course a few small and choice lots have been sold at regular prices, but many thousands more than the demand have been received and these have sold as low as 10 cents per hundred for the New York stock. The Californias do a little better.

There is an abundance of bulbous stock in all lines, but tulips are not in so large receipt as earlier in the season. There are many more callas than the trade can use and the same is true of short longiflorums. Receipts of sweet peas are on the increase and quality is excellent.

Smilax is about the only scarce item. There is an abundance of all other greens.

Easter Prospects.

All thoughts are now centered on Easter. The indications are that there will be larger supplies of lilies than in any previous year, but a large part of the stock is known to be short in stem and of very indifferent quality. At the same time there is much stock of a quality to leave nothing to be desired. Advance quotations are on the basis of $125 per thousand for choice stock. The chances are that there will be a large number of lilies which will be well sold if they bring much less money.

The consensus of opinion is that there will be an abundant supply of roses and carnations, but there is an occasional dissenting voice. One or two growers report their crops now at their height and likely to be pretty well off by April 12.

Prospects are that there will be a tremendous quantity of violets and, with the market in its present state, there is doubt if prices will average as high as last year.

Various Notes.

One of Vaughan & Sperry's out-of-town customers is ordering his stock by aerogram. The American DeForest Wireless Telegraph does not reach many towns, but the service is first-class and the rates cheaper than by wire.

Kennicott Bros. Co. missed an order for 5,000 carnations for shipment last Friday; the letter did not reach them until Saturday morning. The new Chicago postoffice, which cost $6,000,000, is having difficulty to handle the mails promptly and there are many complaints on this score.

Hild Bros., of Lake Forest, are sending very fine stocks to McKellar. They grow Beauty of Nice and several others to perfection.

Bassett & Washburn are nursing their chief engineer. He cautioned the fireman to look out for a big frozen mass of coal at the top of the shed and then stood there while it came down and broke his leg in two places.

There is a report of the illness of August Dressel, of Hammond.

It develops that one Michaels, well known in the market as energetic in the pursuit of crape, is a nephew of Mrs. Netcher, owner of the Boston store. He is to have a window there and what space he needs for a cut flower department.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. had a big decoration for Stevens' last week, and this week have big work on at Field's, Carson-Pirie's and Mandel's.

N. C. Moore & Co. have a nice lot of lilies for Easter plant sales.

The Retailers' Association held its regular meeting last Thursday evening. The latest scheme of some of the members is to induce the wholesalers to set a minimum price for each day.

The J. B. Beamud Co., in view of the short supplies of smilax, points with pride to the filling last week of one order for 650 strings.

Grace B. Hughes has been granted a divorce from Leslie C. Hughes, who was charged with cruelty. The greenhouses at Ridgeway avenue and Douglas Park boulevard have been conducted under the name of Mrs. Hughes.

Joseph Fink, one of the veteran florists on the north side, wishes his son Michael to take charge of his business, and the latter therefore offers for sale the Mulder place on Cottage Grove avenue, which he bought a year or so ago.

W. W. Randall, of the A. L. Randall Co., has returned from West Baden well rested up for the Easter rush.

A. H. Budlong is very enthusiastic over grafted roses. They have had good success this year, but plan something very much better for next season.

L. Coatsworth is very anxious for good weather, to begin work on the Benthay-Coatsworth Co.'s new houses at New Castle.

At E. H. Hunt's they are very busy shipping the season's output of birch-bark ware.

O. W. Frese, at Poehlmann's, states that their crops are now double what they have been in the past fortnight.

The E. F. Winterson Co. reports very good demand for Easter plants.

E. C. Amling says he is shipping smilax to Philadelphia and equally far west. It appears that crops are off very generally throughout the country.

Among last week's visitors were E. J. Fancourt, of Pennock's, Philadelphia, and C. S. Ford, also of Philadelphia. Mr. Ford says that there are now thirty men on the road in the United States selling florists' supplies. Among those in town this week are A. Siegel and his partner, John Burke, from St. Louis.

Peter Reinberg is busy campaigning this week. The election takes place next Tuesday.

G. N. Garland, formerly a carnation grower for George Reinberg, has gone to Washington, Pa., to become foreman for J. H. Seaman & Co.

H. N. Bruns reports business good. He will have a big cut for Easter and expects also to dispose of many pots and pans of valley.

The Foley Mfg. Co. has distributed its new catalogue to the trade. It is full of halftones from photographs of the plants it has erected, and as an evidence of the extent of territory covered it is worth while noting that places in Texas, Alabama, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota and Nebraska are pictured.

TORONTO, ONT.—John H. Dunlop says that he finds the demand exceedingly heavy this season for carnation rooted cuttings; in fact, so heavy that he has to buy to fill orders. Business is good with him in all departments.

LILIES FOR EASTER

Year after year our Lilies have averaged the best in this market. As usual we offer a special price on advance orders. Lots of 100 or over, $125.00 per 1000. Write for special rates on lots of 5,000. Ask for our Complete Easter Price List on Cut Flowers.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

We have been having a great deal of snow and cloudy weather of late. This did not help business, and complaint is heard on all sides. About all the business done the past week was funeral work. The uptown florists, who do the bulk of the work for the large social events, say that if it were not for a little funeral work business would be extremely dull. The down-town florists are better off in this respect, as the counter trade is worth a good deal.

The wholesalers have had a hard week packing away the unsold stock each day, for there has been a glut in almost all lines, especially in roses and carnations. Prices have gone down almost to nothing. Nearly all stock is of extra fine quality and second grades go to the job lot buyer at his own price, which is often ridiculously low.

Sunday St. Patrick's day parade was held, which was postponed from last Sunday, and green carnations were again seen in the florists' windows. This made quite a demand for white carnations on Saturday and the price went up to $2 per hundred for extra good stock. All other carnations could be bought for from $5 to $10 per thousand.

Bulbous stock is not overplentiful, not because the demand is good, but most of the growers are either holding back for Easter or are all cut out. Valley is about the only item in this line that is plentiful. Enough violets are in for the demand. The market has everything it needs in greens.

Various Notes.

The Ellison Floral Co. will open its new quarters this week in the Simmons Hardware Co.'s store on Broadway. They will have a large show window facing Broadway.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers says she has had plenty of business of all kinds, especially funeral work, so that Lent has not made much difference to her so far.

Frank Ellis, who should have been back from Panama a week ago, writes that he missed his ship and will not be home much before April 1.

James Dunford, at Clayton, will have a fine lot of Harrisii plants for Easter, also other bulbous stock in pots.

Beyer Bros. will be in fine shape for Easter trade. A fine lot of Harrisii, Dutch hyacinths and other blooming plants is seen here.

C. Young & Sons Co. is very busy in the seed and bulb department. J. Arata, who has charge of the cut flower department, says that trade has kept up well during Lent.

J. F. Wilcox, of Council Bluffs, is sending Ellis a nice lot of Beauties, Brides and Maids.

Sanders, Beyer and Schray had quite a busy week decorating down-town department stores for spring openings.

Claude Wisley, of Murphysboro, Ill., was a caller the past week. Mr. Wisley reports trade good and will build two new houses this spring.

Fred C. Weber, Theo. Miller and Fred Meinhardt seem to have fallen by the way. The Monday night florist bowlers say they have not been seen at the alleys since last November. Can it be that Dr. Osler has a grip on them? This venerable gentleman must also be holding down our old friends, C. C. Sanders, Emil Schray, Robt. Beyer, Charles Juengel and Frank Fillmore.

Nick Himmers reports that the five new houses which he will put up this summer will be 500 feet long and will be planted to carnations. J. J. B.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Flowers have cleared out very well during the past week, and business has been satisfactory all round. The near approach of Easter makes it unlikely that any slump should occur unless the weather should become warm and rush stock in. The cold weather of late seemed to brace up the market. It is unlikely that such abnormally low readings can continue much longer. As it is, dealers are now guessing if much of their Easter stock will be on time, and considerable speculation on this score is being indulged in.

Roses have not yet been too abundant and have cleared out well at former week's prices. The same holds true of carnations, quotations for which have varied from $1.50 to $4 per hundred. On violets prices have stiffened. Singles are nearing the end except for cold frame stock. Doubles, however, are abundant; prices range from 50 cents, 75 cents and $1, some stock selling a little cheaper.

Bulbous stock has cleared out very well, good double tulips and white narcissii being in good demand. There are sufficient lilies, callas and other flowers for all requirements. Green stock is of improving quality, especially adiantum.

Various Notes.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club field day at the establishments of W. W. Edgar Co. and Pierce Bros., March 31, promises to be largely attended. It should prove one of the most interesting yet held. Tickets are out for the club's banquet to be held at Horticultural hall April 26. This will be the biggest affair of the kind held in local horticultural circles for years. The club membership is now 292 and applications now on hand will lift it to the 300 mark next meeting. Among exhibits at the last meeting was the old but rarely seen Lathyrus pubescens, from W. J. Rea, with pretty pale violet flowers. This makes a very desirable greenhouse climber.

Visitors have been numerous this week, owing to the rose convention. A number of the prominent places were taken in by the rose specialists while here.

A. Herrington and W. Duckham were unable to stay to the banquet. Mr. Herrington had to go home and seek medical advice, and we trust he is now in better health.

William Sim is shipping in beautifully colored Princess of Wales and Governor Herrick violets.

An account of the fire at W. W. Rawson & Co.'s will be found on another page.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

The slight effect that Lent had on our industry seems now to have about worn off, as business is moving along at a very encouraging pace. The demand for all classes of stock is very good and the wholesale houses are selling out fairly clean every day. Thus the price of all qualities of stock is holding up very nicely. Several funerals of note have helped along the demand. Spring openings are also taking up a large amount of the cheaper grades of blooms. As a rule store openings have not used as many flowers this year as formerly, which altogether is a good thing, as I do not believe that the giving away of flowers on these occasions does the business any good. In fact, if anything, it does harm by cheapening the value of flowers in the eyes of the flower buying public.

The supply of stock in all lines has been good and in most cases fully equal to the demand. This is always a very pleasant state of affairs, as all orders can be filled with good stock. The shipping trade has been very good for this time of year and has been one of the items to keep up the healthy tone of the market. Bulbous flowers are especially good and are selling out. Even the green goods supply has increased a good deal and is about equal to the demand.

The closeness of Easter is making us begin to think what the supply of stock is likely to be on that date. It is yet a little early to state with any degree of certainty what the supply will be then. So far as roses and carnations are concerned, much depends on the weather. In bulbous stock this market will be in fine shape. Easter lilies will be in large supply and of best quality. Cincinnati is slowly coming to the front as a wholesale cut flower market, but its slowness is characteristic of its sureness. We will get there some day, and when we do we will be there to stay. Just keep an eye on that.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The real winter weather of the whole season has been very much in evidence during the past week. The temperature was caught hugging zero very closely and up in the mountains it went as low as 14 degrees below. Nothing quite so unseasonable was ever known by the oldest inhabitant of Twenty-eighth street. It was a blue week for business and it must have been the weather that got so many wholesalers "hors de combat." This week opens with rain and milder weather and before its close doubtless the last semblance of winter will vanish and before Easter we will forget there ever was an overstock of cold.

The market has gone to pieces. Hundreds of the finest Beauties could be bought Monday evening at $20 per hundred. Everything else was suffering. All roses declined. Carnations, the best of them, held around $2 and $2.50 per hundred and soon down to $1. Violets, the specials, went slowly at 30 cents and from that on down to 10 cents. Lilies, lilacs, smilax, all have joined the procession, and yet, it is recalled, last year at this time prices were even lower—a condition of things which invariably manifests itself for two weeks before the Easter festival. The last days of Lent are sad days.

Asking prices for Easter will not be excessive. Growers may as well refrain completely from embalming their surplus. Be advised in time and send in everything you have to sell every day. If you don't, you will regret it always, for little consideration or return will anything yield that is not of superior quality.

In the notes of a year ago Beauties had fallen to $15, Maids to $6 and the best violets to 25 cents per hundred. Bulbous stock and mignonette had forgotten the meaning of value and were dragging the market down. The usual warnings concerning pickled stock were hung out and a good Easter was predicted with reasonable prices. If you remember the prophecy was fulfilled.

It is early yet to predict prices accurately, but one may venture to say that Beauties may touch $1 each and violets 50 cents per hundred. Plants will be the great supply, as in the past four or five years, and most of the retailers have already made their purchases. Another week and deliveries will begin.

Plant stock is abundant and on the average extra fine. All our growers are well stocked but there will be none too many to go around. There is nothing new this season. Azaleas and Crimson Ramblers are very abundant. These will be the popular things and the medium size plants of each were all disposed of weeks ago.

Various Notes.

Reed & Keller have a novelty which they control, called the "Pluvius," an automatic watering bulb which promises to be a great seller. It is a simple, practical, serviceable thing that will prove a boon to plant lovers who are forgetful.

The rose show at Boston was voted a great success and far in advance of last season. A. J. Guttman was the only wholesaler from New York whose interest in the exhibit was sufficient to cause him to make the journey and he was able to stay only a few hours on account of a serious attack of the grip.

A. Warrendorf is opening a branch retail store in Broadway, close to Forty-second street, a splendid location near Scallon's, where he will doubtless win much transient patronage by artistically decorated windows, for which his big store in Broadway, near Twenty-eighth street, is noted.

Wm. Plumb's office is at 1133 Broadway.

A week ago Mrs. Joseph Fenrich presented her husband with a partner for the wholesale department of this "reliable house" and Joseph Fenrich, Jr., is here ready for business. April 5, a year ago, Mr. and Mrs. Fenrich were receiving congratulations as they started on their honeymoon. This is a rapid city.

John J. Perkins offers a reward for the return of his typewriting machine, stolen from his office last Sunday. Thieves came up through the cellar. Mr. Perkins' son Robert will be operated on at Roosevelt hospital Thursday of this week for heart displacement, the heart being nearly four inches beyond its normal position. The operation is a serious one. Mr. Perkins, Jr., has been ill for a long time.

James Coyle, with H. C. Froment, has been very ill with grip for two weeks and pneumonia was feared. He is much reduced in weight and convalesces slowly.

Charles Millang also has been battling with the grip and was laid up at the Breslin hotel for a few days. He is still quite ill.

S. A. Anderson, of Buffalo, was in the city last week and also visited the plant growers. He was "laying up treasures" for Easter.

Mrs. J. Friedlander is still hale and hearty at 83 years and attends to the interests of her store as keenly as if she were but 38. She is a remarkable lady and looks as if she could round out her century with flying colors.

N. Lecakes & Co. have in storage 10,000,000 bronze and 5,000,000 green galax leaves, a wonderful accumulation. Mr. Lecakes has just purchased a nice property for a country summer home at Massapequa, L. I.

Julius Lang has added a plant department to his wholesale business, with Mr. Kline in charge.

James McManus moves May 1 to his new headquarters, 42 W. Twenty-eighth street, and James Hart, the veteran, who has spent a generation in West Thirtieth street, moves to a fine large store at 103 W. Twenty-eighth street, directly opposite that of J. K. Allen and the first door off Sixth avenue. Centralization seems to be the watchword. It looks as if the first and second floors of all Twenty-eighth street ultimately would be in possession of the wholesale florists of New York.

Warrendorf, of the Ansonia, has charge of the extensive floral decorations at one of the big dry goods stores and gets $1,000 this week for the display.

David Clarke's Sons are about ready for the Easter rush. Their show windows contain about everything that will be needed and are most artistically arranged. Looks like Fred Lentz's work. The firm had a big church and house wedding on Monday. Jury duty keeps one of the brothers busy at present, so the usual dullness of these last weeks is somewhat welcome.

Henry Siebrecht, Sr., is recovering from a tussle with the grip, but nothing succeeds in overcoming his indomitable will. He is one of the men who believe in growing young and staying so.

Jos. Leikens is growing fat and prosperous in Thirty-third street, near the Waldorf, and has some of the bluest blooded of the 400 among his patrons. Mrs. Leikens still proves the ablest of lieutenants and the rapidity of growth into success of this house has been remarkable.

The Market.

Business last week was much better than for the preceding week. Almost everything was cleaned up at fair prices and an increased cut in all lines has made the growers feel better.

The quality of the roses and carnations seen at the Cleveland Cut Flower Co.'s establishment was never better, and seeing the large quantities of flowers moved daily by this firm leads one to look back a few years and note the difference in procuring stock to fill one's orders. Now we telephone the entire order in and the same is delivered at our store in a remarkably short time. In the good old days we hitched up and drove eight or ten miles and called on as many growers as possible in order to get enough stock to meet the demand.

GOVERNOR HERRICK

The New Single Violet

Governor Herrick, is the finest and freest bloomer ever offered for sale, the plants producing over 200 blooms in a season lasting from Oct. 1 to May 14. The color is a rich, dark purple, large open flower, on a very strong stem. It is the best keeping Violet on the market and received special mention at the Boston Carnation Convention after being picked four days and traveling 700 miles before being judged. At Louisville, Ky., the Governor Herrick was one of the sensations of the exhibition.

Prices of rooted cuttings are as follows: Per doz., $2.00; per 100, $10.00; per 1000, $75.00; 5000 or more, $60.00 per 1000. All orders will be filled in rotation, with the finest stock ever sent out. Write me to day for full description of the Governor Herrick.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Conditions continue fair. A good many flowers are sold at good prices, some at poor prices, and some are not sold at all. But the volume of business is fully equal to the average at this season of the year, with indications that an improvement will be here by the end of the week. Violets, sweet peas, and Golden Spur narcissus are selling well. Beauties are lower in price. The quality is very fine. Gardenias are in over-supply, the best long stemmed flowers bringing only the listed prices. Kaisers have made their appearance. The quality is exceptionally fine.

Philadelphia Beauties.

Last Thursday evening was a gala occasion in this city. The Florists' Club entertained the wives and sweethearts of the members with a reception, games and refreshments. On the same evening, a little band of Philadelphians journeyed to Boston to the annual meeting of the American Rose Society, where on the following day they captured cups galore. Briefly summarized, they took everything in the shape of a Beauty prize, bar one, that was offered, demonstrating more conclusively than ever that Philadelphia produces the finest Beauties in the country. To go into details, George Burton captured the Lord & Burnham cup and a first, with fifty Beauties. Adolph Farenwald captured the MacMullin cup, with fifty Beauties, also the Elliott with fifty Liberties, and the Penn cup, with twenty-five Liberties. The Floral Exchange captured first with Queen of Edgely. J. Henry Bartram was second in the Lord & Burnham competition, with fifty exceptionally fine Beauties.

"Smith—Florist."

A very large sign, bearing the above words, greets the passerby at Market and Sixtieth streets, a sign so imposing that it reminds one of the famous sign at Sixteenth and Ludlow streets. Entering, the visitor is cordially received by the original William C. Smith (not of North Carolina), who cheerfully displays a very fine lot of Easter plants, also a very choice lot of well budded rhododendrons in variety. His lilies, of the variety called giganteum, are very robust, healthy, and well flowered. He has three thousand pots. His Spiraea Gladstone is a picture, beautifully shaped plants, remarkably well furnished with flower spikes. He also grows azaleas, both specimens and medium sizes that were well timed and in nice condition; hyacinths and other Dutch bulbs that will be brought in in good time; besides a variety of other plants. Mr. Smith is a specialist with Ficus elastica, which he grows in quantity for orders. Boston ferns in all sizes are a specialty here. He has discovered a clever means of propagating which greatly facilitates his work with these plants. Carnations Vesper, Enchantress and Fair Maid were vigorous and full of bloom.

The Street is Startled.

The street is agitated by a strange story, which if it be true will convulse our floral world. It is that a combination of growers has been formed so strong that it comprises every shipper of note supplying this market. That the combination has secured a charter under the laws of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania under the name of the Flower Trust. That it has rented the basement of the Reading Terminal, now occupied by Wyman's restaurant. That every grower is under bond to send all his product to the trust. That the Filbert street side will be devoted to cut flowers, the south side to plants. That the president is a rose grower of national repute, who has built and is operating three ranges of glass; who owns other real estate; who has been receiver for a large concern and who is certain to achieve next Saturday night and on the following day the place be made ready for business on Monday.

Inquiry at the great wholesale houses showed that the blow was as shattering as it was unexpected. That the business it had taken years to build up was to be shattered in a moment, seemed hard, very hard. It is odd, one of them said, that the day set for this great change, next Sunday, should be the first of April, All Fool's Day.

A Good Grower.

L. J. Reuter, whose fine stock was greatly admired here this winter, is operating the greenhouses formerly run by Samuel J. Bunting, of asparagus fame. Mr. Reuter is evidently a skilful grower of roses and of carnations, his Chateaus being exceptionally fine. All his stock, both old and young, were in excellent condition despite the trying season we have experienced during the past winter.

Various Notes.

Samuel S. Pennock speaks highly of the American Rose Society's show at Boston last week. He says that a vase of the rose Mme. Abel Chatenay, grown by the Exeter Rose Conservatories, of Exeter, N. H., was easily the feature of the whole show. The stems were as long as those of Beauties, the flowers large and well formed. He also admired the Killarney shown by the Boston growers.

The Hugh Graham Co., with greenhouses at Logan, has been reorganized. The members of the new company are William Graham, John H. Bainbridge and John A. Burroughs.

William J. Baker will handle the fancy daffodils of the Hugh Graham Co. These daffodils were a feature of the market last Easter.

J. A. Smith, of the H. F. Michell Co., has returned from a business trip to Carlisle, York, Lancaster, and Harrisburg. He states that the advance orders for bulbs are fifty per cent ahead of last season.

Godfrey Aschmann has a very fine stock of Easter plants in the medium sizes, most in demand for shipping orders.

W. E. McKissick is receiving some fine Golden Spur and Paper White narcissi.

Samuel S. Pennock is booking advance orders for Easter plants. He has already sold out of ericas, which are scarce this year.

Edward Reid has been shipping some very choice stock to Florida this week.

Pennock Bros. had a luncheon at the Bellevue-Stratford on Tuesday, where they used 3,000 pink sweet peas. The flowers, which were exceptionally fine, on long stems, were furnished by Edward Reid.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Business the past week has been good with all of the dealers and no trouble has been experienced in getting stock. The most of the dealers are carrying heavy stocks and the dealers who do not have greenhouses are the more fortunate ones during the present time. Anything in the way of roses and carnations, also bulb stock, can be purchased at a very small figure. While the market is glutted, there has been no cut in prices to make mention of, outside of the Greeks and department stores. Some very fine carnations have been offered by them for 35 cents per dozen. Roses are retailing for $1.50 and $2 per dozen.

The cold, disagreeable weather of the last few days has hurt business some, and until the weather settles we do not expect a big business. Easter plants have begun to appear in some of the stores, but they are those that have come in a little ahead of the season. The dealers who have no greenhouses have commenced making the rounds and are ordering their Easter supply of plants.

St. Paul.

Christ Hansen is making preparations to repair four of his houses, which will improve his plant considerably.

Haugen & Swanson will have some very nice violet plants for Easter. The violets they have been cutting this season have been the finest in this section and have sold readily.

Aug. S. Swanson has some very fine bulb stock, but has hardly had enough with which to supply the demand of his two stores.

Holm & Olson are intending to build as soon as the weather will permit.

L. L. May & Co.'s lilies never looked better.

Minneapolis.

Donaldson's department store reports a good trade and contemplates disposing of considerable stock for Easter. Their houses look good and have every appearances of having almost everything in bloom for Easter. Although they have a large range of houses, they have not as yet been able to grow enough for their large trade, and are compelled to buy practically all of their carnations.

The Minneapolis Floral Co. is loaded to the brim with Easter stock. It all looks good and will undoubtedly be in bloom. They have about 1,500 very fine baby ramblers, which will sell on sight.

Patthey & Thompson are doing very well, and like all dealers, are looking forward toward supplying themselves for Easter. FELIX.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

There is little change in the condition of business over that of a week ago. The unusual wintry weather with snow-falls has made disagreeable conditions for shoppers. There is an abundance of cut stock for all purposes, though no glut of anything. The thoughts of the retailers now go forward to Easter; the probable supply of stock; the weather; will the young man send his sweetheart a bunch of violets or a box of candy? In the aggregate these are matters of importance to the trade.

Various Notes.

F. H. Kramer went to Boston, taking an exhibit of his rose, Queen Beatrice, for the rose show. Fine stock of this rose can now be seen at his range, and it looks as if it is to be a stayer.

From an estimate submitted to Chairman Tawney of the house appropriation committee by the postmaster general it is learned that the seeds sent out under the franks of congressmen annually cost the post office department about $35,000. That is probably twice as much as they are worth, and when packing and other expenses are considered, it will be seen that the people pay a pretty sum for this antiquated little graft for the farmers.

It does not appear, however, that there is any great demand for free seeds from the farmers. They accept and laugh at them, and in some instances feed them to the chickens.

Secretary Taft was the guest of honor at a dinner at the new Willard hotel March 20, given by the party that were his guests on his late Philippine trip. The decorations, executed by J. H. Small & Sons, were original and beautiful. On the table the Island of Luzon was geographically represented and "China" and "Japan" were in the background, represented with scenery, palms, flowering plants and models.

The most unique features were a Philippine shack, or house, erected over the table, and a model of the steamer Manchuria moored at the wharf, the guests entering the banquet hall over her decks.

The walls were heavily garlanded with smilax and a profusion of American Beauty roses, carnations and other seasonable flowers, transformed all into an oriental bower. SCOTTY.

RALEIGH, N. C.

Business has been exceptionally good this season, but Lent is having its effect now. We long to see the day when it will not weigh so heavily on our business. It seems that if people want to be self-sacrificing, meek and good, a nice vase of flowers would help out considerably and make them better still.

We have the assurance of our congressman that he will do what he can to stop the free distribution of seed by the government.

A SLEEPLESS PLANTSMAN.

Godfrey Aschmann, Philadelphia's sleepless plantsman, is at present in the midst of one of his busiest seasons. Mr. Aschmann never permits his bench space to become idle. He turns out more crops per year than almost any grower in the trade. Following the Christmas business he moved in his Easter plants and now has his place packed to the limit with stock said to be in excellent condition. Azaleas are his Easter specialty, but dozens of other blooming plants are grown in great quantity. He has connections in Belgium which have gained for him liberal supplies of Azalea Vander Cruysen during the past several seasons that this variety has been scarce. The Easter trade is already well under way and a number of varieties are already out. Mr. Aschmann expects to clean up everything by Easter Sunday and will then have room to spread out the big stock of spring bedding plants which he has in the course of preparation.

IN THE MARKET

HENRY F. MICHELL CO.

1018 MARKET ST., PHILADELPHIA

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The Market.

On the afternoon of Sunday, March 11, it began to snow, and with intervals it has snowed ever since. Of course being so late in the year it melted largely as it came, but when I tell you that twenty-seven inches of snow covers the ground you will realize how we have been fixed the past two weeks. It has been the coldest of the winter also; zero to 20 degrees above. With the exception of Saint Patrick's day and last Saturday trade has been only fair.

Carnations have been a glut lately, many sales being made by growers as low as $1.50 per hundred. Bulb stock the same rate.

Various Notes.

The fakers are springing up all over the city, selling carnations at 25 cents a dozen.

Fred Windmiller has several very elegant seedling carnations; especially two very large and heavy stemmed varieties—a pure white, and a clear pink.

The Florists' Club held four meetings during the month just closing, the special work being the packaging of some 40,000 penny packets of both flower and vegetable seeds for the children of the public schools.

The Livingston Seed Co. has just published for free distribution to its customers a very neat and attractive leaflet on the "Care and Cultivation of the Baby Rambler Rose."

Graff Bros. have been having a violet sale of twenty-five flower bunches at 25 cents. It went well.

Not only have the seed orders fallen off since the snow came, but it is impossible to ship potatoes, onion sets, bulbs, etc., until the weather breaks.

Robert Livingston, of the Livingston Seed Co., during the past week made a business trip to Toledo and other Ohio cities.

Some varieties of vine and tomato seeds are getting short.

Emil Metzmaier has some 5,000 elegant tulips which he is holding back for Easter.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. reports a fine business lately in funeral work; other trade very slow.

The recent meeting of the officers and executive board of the S. A. F. at Dayton, has started the enthusiasm among the craft in this vicinity for a grand turnout next summer.

The F. M. Kirby & Co. department store is having a special sale of Stump & Walter Co.'s sweet peas at 5 cents an ounce.

Our visitors the past week were William E. Langbridge, of Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y., and Jacob Kershaw, representing William Rust & Sons, New Brunswick, N. J. ZERO.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business remains about the same. Good roses are keeping up their price, $1.50 to $2.50 a dozen, retail. For the first time in many months carnations are more than plentiful. Not only the Lawson but the lighter colored varieties also. Valley, callas, snapdragon, daffodils and violets are also almost too plentiful. Green keeps pretty well on the move.

Club Meeting.

Despite the fact that florists as a rule do not mind bad weather, a terrific blizzard greatly reduced the usually large attendance at the club's last meeting.

A very interesting paper on steam heating was read by Frank A. Simonds, of Grand Rapids.

The fall exhibition question was again put over until next meeting, but it was decided to hold a carnation exhibition in the near future, either at the club room or at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange. With the co-operation of the local growers and of the introducers of new varieties throughout the country, it is hoped to have a very complete exhibit.

The question box brought forth little of interest, presumably on account of the small attendance.

Under the heading of miscellaneous business, two letters addressed to the club were read. One was an invitation from the American Rose Society to attend its annual meeting at Boston. The other letter was from Louis Wittbold, giving a practical demonstration of his watering device at Rackham's.

A paper by Hugo Schroeter on "Seasonable Preparation for Easter Trade" was greeted with applause.

After adjournment the members enjoyed a social hour.

Schroeter's men were very busy the past week decorating for the spring opening of Detroit's largest dry goods store. Besides several van-loads of plants and about fifty elaborate baskets, several hundred American Beauties, Killarneys and Richmond roses were in evidence.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.;
First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at Toledo, G., June 26-28, 1906.

THE onion set grower is anxious for good weather.

COUNTER trade is expected to begin in earnest as soon as the belated cold snap is over.

THERE undoubtedly is plenty of onion seed to be had, but it is not the kind wanted.

TORONTO.—Wintry weather has curtailed the seed business. Prices are lower on clover and grass seeds.

CHAS. P. GUELF, of the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y., is at present making Philadelphia his headquarters.

So far as reports to date would indicate, the pea and bean acreage for 1906 crop will be cut considerably below the acreage of 1905.

CHICAGO.—A second supply of cauliflower seed is being called for by gardeners, owing to a too early sowing of the former lot in anticipation of an early spring.

THERE is much complaint that field corn of good quality is hard to get. This refers to shelled stock, as it appears that ear corn of a good quality is to be had if the price is forthcoming.

THE mail order houses report trade fully up to the March record so far for the month. This is thought to be a good showing, considering the wintry weather conditions that have prevailed the past fortnight.

FROM the jobbers' standpoint everything is satisfactory, yet there is a feeling that the mild weather in the early months of the year, followed by such a cold March, may switch things off and upset calculations.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued as Circular No. 63 "Root-maggots and How to Control Them," which will be of assistance to seedsmen in correspondence with planters who are having trouble with these very common enemies of corn, cabbage, onion, etc.

REPORTS from the sections where onion sets are used largely is to the effect that planting is retarded by the unseasonable weather. This reacts upon the handlers of sets, as at this season of the year the natural sprouting of the stock causes a heavy loss to those who are compelled to hold back till purchasers are ready to plant.

CANADA also has a free seed distribution, conducted through the Experiment Farm at Ottawa. Dr. C. E. Saunders, in charge, states that for February 28, 740 letters requesting seed samples were received. One day 2,731 were received. In January 8,783 letters were received and since the first of this month the average has been about 500 each day.

THE call for watermelon seed from Texas indicates increased acreage this year in spite of the cry that the private car lines get all the profit.

THE 1905 bean crop of Michigan is said to exceed that of 1904, which was estimated at 3,000,000 bushels by the secretary of agriculture for the state.

If any seedsman is interested in the "Storage and Germination of Wild Rice Seed" or in the "Poisonous Action of Johnson Grass," he will obtain new information by sending for Bulletin No. 90, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

THE efforts of the seed trade to arouse public opinion unfavorable to the free seed distribution has resulted in much good editorial work on the part of the newspapers and thousands of letters on the subject are received by congressmen. Many candidates for the spring election to congress, as opponents to present members, are declaring against free seeds.

THE trade has spent the brief leisure moments afforded by bad weather the past week in speculating on who it is that needs a five-thousand-dollar manager for a mail trade. Half a dozen different big wholesale houses are suggested as being about to go into the catalogue field, guesses running all the way from Detroit to San Francisco, but the only sure thing is that several rising young seedsmen would each like to be turned loose on the job—and the salary. All the information Hapgood's can give out is that the proposed catalogue business will be separate from the wholesale business by which it is owned and operated under a different name.

ROCHESTER SEED NOTES.

Business is good and all seem satisfied, both with the past and present trade, also the outlook. Red clover, though, at the present price is moving slowly and such conditions are not to be wondered at. Alsike took an upward turn on account of the iniquitous price the dealers have been forced to charge for reds. Timothy also seemed to be in better trim and good orders were entered. Onion sets, which have proven a hard proposition this winter, are moving off gradually and whites are getting short. Sweet corn seems to be in abundance and some low prices have been quoted on Evergreen. While the bottom dropped out of the potato market about a couple of weeks ago as far as restaurant stock is concerned, Ford, Connelly and Aldridge are still booking orders for seed purposes at the same old prices and from the same old customers. A look around Fishers, N. Y., where their establishments are located, would dissipate, if it ever existed, the idea that these gentlemen have not the space, stock and facilities for attending to their customers' interests.

Alfalfa is not selling as quickly as could be wished. The omniscient gentlemen at the capital have cast a shadow over the poor farmers' minds—the fear that good alfalfa cannot be obtained. The variations in analyses of the same bulk goods from four different and widely separated experiment stations (and there is no doubt that the Washington authorities never "lit" on a more suitable cognomen) are so different that we feel like letting our worthy representatives have the prerogative of distributing alfalfa themselves—"free from dodder and all other obnoxious weeds"—when they get some.

RAWSON BURNED OUT.

Fire destroyed the three-story building of W. W. Rawson & Co., 12 and 13 Faneuil Hall square, Boston, early Friday morning, March 23. Crossed wires are believed to have been the cause. The loss was complete, all the stock of seeds, implements, etc., being ruined, either by fire or water. The firm carried $25,000 insurance on the stock, but this only partly covers the loss. The fire could hardly have come at a worse time, as the season's stock of seeds was all on hand and a heavy trade was just fairly beginning. It will be impossible to replace much of the stock for this season's trade and orders are flowing in with increasing volume. Mr. Rawson has not decided whether or not to reopen in a new location. However, the business is one of the old and well known ones and will doubtless be continued, although Mr. Rawson has many other large interests at Arlington, Medford and Newton, N. H.

MAINE SEED LAWS.

In 1897 the legislature passed an act regulating the sale of seeds in the state of Maine, but it was not until 1905 that provision was made for the testing of samples, the work being done at the Experiment Station at Orono. The law requires that every lot of seeds of one pound or more, whether in bulk or package, offered for sale in the state must be accompanied by a written or printed guarantee of its percentage of purity and freedom from foreign matter. Dealers may lose their guarantees on tests of the Experiment Station or conducted by themselves under such conditions as the director of the Experiment Station may prescribe. The penalty for failure to provide the guarantee or for, with intent to deceive, wrongly mailing any package of garden, vegetable or other agricultural seeds, sweet corn, trees, shrubs and ornamental plants excepted, is $100 for the first offense and $200 for each subsequent offense. The Experiment Station is required to publish the results of all tests made by it.

The Experiment Station has now published its first seed bulletin, containing results of purity tests, in nearly every case the samples being well within equitable standards. Most of the tests were made for planters, but many were samples sent by dealers, and these are named. In the case of a few poor samples it is explained that these were seeds "offered to them and it does not necessarily mean that they offered for sale in smaller acreage than usual is standing. Italy is the principal district from which this article is procured for the English and German trade and also very largely for the American trade? A genuine shortage in the Italian seed districts would be a serious matter for the seed trade and not easily made up by any heavy crop from other districts in which cauliflower seed is grown, either in Europe or America. In conversation with one of the leading Italian seed growers in London the other day I gathered that in the near future some considerable advance in this line could very reasonably be expected.

The trade in England, especially retail, is now at fullest swing and generally the report is that increased business is being done. Sweet peas are blooming.

The conversation with the same grower in reference to onion seed was also in a similar strain and a considerable advance in the European markets is already taking place. Italy is one of the principal countries from which supplies for England and the European trade are obtained, and the acreage for the coming season will be much less than usual in that country and very probably in other producing centers also.

The home-grown onion for domestic consumption has stood at very low prices in England, and in view of the ever increasing supply and cheapness of the Egyptian article (generally termed by the consumer "Spanish") there is no apparent chance of the English grown bulb reaching a profitable price unless something out of the ordinary happens to the foreign supply. Therefore the trade in onion seed in England is likely to be a decreasing one year by year, and it will require a big reduction in the production of seed so far as England is concerned to cause the price of seed to rise or even keep up its average level.

The growing of Brussels sprouts for the vegetable market has this season been very unprofitable and many acres have not been worth marketing, in consequence of which many extra acres are standing for seed purposes. I have trav-

CAMPANULAS FOR MARKET.

Campanula Persicifolia.

There are several campanulas which would pay for more attention than they usually get. During the past season plants of several sorts were seen in Covent Garden market, London, also cut bloom; for the latter purpose it is the varieties of Campanula persicifolia that are most useful, the best being grandiflora alba; the clear blue mauve variety also sell fairly well. For those who have a local trade they should prove very useful. I should add that the double variety is even more useful. A good deal depends on culture; they may be grown under almost any conditions, but will well repay a little extra attention. Fairly good results may be had from seedlings, but it is better to rely on dividing clumps of selected stock. Good loam that has been well manured will suit them best. Old clumps that have been standing in the same ground do not give good spikes of bloom. Divided and re-planted in autumn or very early spring they should do well the same season, yet with plenty of room and good ground they may do even better the second year. By sowing seed early, and planting out after the plants are well established, they may flower the same season, and a selection of the best types may be made; although they may come fairly true, there will be sure to be some variations, and by raising some seedlings annually, a healthy stock can be kept up, and the strain improved.

Campanula Pyramidalis.

Most of the plants seen in Covent Garden market last season were grown in small pots. Although a perennial, it is most satisfactory when treated as a biennial. Seed sown early in the spring will make good plants for the following year. One autumn I received some plants which were considered to be too small to be of service for the following year, but I potted them in good soil, and kept them in a cold pit during the winter, and potted them on in 7-inch pots early in the year. After they were well-rooted, as an experiment, I started them, giving them manure water and gradually increased the strength, and I found they appreciated liberal treatment for they made very fine spikes of bloom and kept their foliage; but in small pots they lose their foliage at the base. Unfortunately they do not flower early enough for the best London trade, and later there is only a limited demand, yet they come in at a time when there are many decorations to be done in the provinces, and are also serviceable for the flower shows. In large groups there is nothing more effective for a background, or for standing up above other shorter-growing plants.

Campanula Isophylla Alba.

This has now become an established market plant, though when first introduced it did not find much favor. There are few plants which require less cultural skill to grow well. To get good plants, it must be propagated from the short cuttings which come from the base soon after the plants have done flowering. Grown from a single cutting, I have seen a good plant established in one season, yet for market work it is better to grow from three to five young plants in each pot. This will ensure a well-furnished pot, and a limited number of well-furnished pots will pay better than a larger number grown singly.

In addition to the white variety, the blue has now been revived, and of this we have several slight variations. Mayii is recognized as one of the best, but there are now others of similar habit. I have found, says "Metropolitan" in the Horticultural Advertiser that when Balchiniana, the pretty variegated variety, reverts to the green form, it makes a good plant, with blue flowers of better quality than are seen on the variety with variegated leaves.

A BEAUTIFUL PILLAR PLANT.

There is an abundance of plants suitable for clothing the pillars of conservatories and other cool structures, but it is doubtful whether there is among the many good kinds one to surpass the graceful Cestrum Newalli, says a writer in the Gardener's Magazine. All the cestrums in general cultivation are more or less attractive, but the flowers are dull in comparison with this form, and the plants are consequently less effective when in bloom. It is now in full bloom, and those who have not as yet had an opportunity of seeing the plant in perfection should, if they are within a convenient distance of Kew, visit the Royal Gardens. There are several specimens in the temperate house, but the finest is at the east end of the structure, where it presents a delightful contrast to the acacias that it has for its near neighbors. The specimen is trained to one of the pillars, which are between twelve and fifteen feet high, and from near the ground line to the top it is densely clothed with long, slightly-drooping branches, from two to three feet in length, and furnished with the bright orange-red flowers throughout their whole length. To obtain such satisfactory results as in this case, the branches are cut back to within a few buds of their base as soon as the beauty of the flowers is past, and the resulting growths are allowed to extend their full length unchecked. The practice which in some instances is adopted of stopping the shoots of the cestrums during the growing season, destroys the graceful character of the plants and renders the abundant production of flowers impossible.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' and Gardeners' Club of Rhode Island was held March 19. President J. F. Schelling presided. S. D. Millin gave readings in Scotch and French dialects.

PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Farmers who have taken contracts for cultivating the experimental alfalfa tracts in the Willamette valley for the Harriman lines will be sent the seed for planting within two weeks. The government agreed to furnish forty per cent of the seed required and this is expected to arrive almost any day.

VICTORIA, B. C.

A piercing north wind March 10 ushered in a week of hard frost. On one night the thermometer registered 16 degrees. This has wrought havoc. Stocks of cabbages and cauliflowers went by the thousand. Violets which were just in their prime were laid low and it is doubtful if another bloom will be picked this season. Even primroses went down.

Carnations everywhere now are excellent. The two months' magnificent weather we have enjoyed leaves no excuse for poor flowers.

A. J. Woodward has added two more buildings to the block of four houses, each 26x300, which he erected in the fall. The new range, Mr. Woodward says, is for tomatoes.

Wollaston & Wallace, a new firm here, started a bulb farm last fall and are now busy shipping daffodils to many points. Jay & Co. lost many thousands of cabbage plants in the frost. As they are the principal source of supply for their district it is apt to prove an inconvenience. E. A. W.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather has moderated quite a bit and everything is lovely with the single exception of the florists' business and that is remarkably quiet, even for the season. Flowers of all description, excepting violets and roses are very plentiful, although there has been no change in price for several weeks. If the present glut is not relieved before we may expect a break near Easter. Violets have about finished blooming for this season and we will see little more of them until next winter. Carnations are well up to form and color. Roses of the best grades are very short in supply and were there any heavy demand at present there would be considerable scrambling for stock. Bulbous material of all kinds is past its prime and only a few late tulips and daffodils are seen. Narcissi of the white and light yellow sorts have entirely disappeared.

From present indications there will be a heavy cut of lilies for Easter, that is, if we have good weather in the meantime. Wild greens of all descriptions are now at their best and are being lavishly used by the dealers in every variety of work. Some fine wild flowers are being brought into town and in the event of a few days more of sunshine we can expect vast quantities to be seen everywhere.

Various Notes.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., of Philadelphia, is in town.

W. T. Kirkman has returned to Merced. Mr. Kirkman is a well known nurseryman in his locality.

The continued late rains have interfered with the planting of deciduous stock to a great extent and for many trees it is now too late to handle them.

From present indications flowering plants will be used very freely in Easter decorations again this year. All the dealers seem to have good supplies on hand. G.

equal to the demand and this fact has been more noticeable than ever this season.

The weather has of course, very much to do with this particular branch, and a much better showing would have been made here if the climatic conditions were more favorable. Although the trees from which these blossoms are cut are not of a very delicate type, the flowers are quite the reverse and fully as much care must be taken in handling them as with much more expensive stock. For certain kinds of decorating there seems to be nothing at this season of the year to replace fruit blossoms and for that reason they are in good demand.

We have the various kinds from about January until May, each at its particular season depending somewhat on the lateness or earliness of the rains and the severity of our frosts. The double flowered fruits are, of course, in the greater demand and bring the best prices, although some varieties among the single flowered sorts which I shall mention, are also good sellers.

The earliest of this class of flowers is the red-flowered Japanese quince (Cydonia Japonica). This is not a fruiting quince, and is cultivated entirely as an ornamental shrub. The supply of this effective flower is rather limited here, and the blossoms are always in good demand. There are many varieties of quinces, but only the red-flowered variety is in demand. The blooms last a long time and are very fine for decorative purposes. None of the blossoms of the cultivated quinces are used, as they are very delicate and do not hold together well.

The season for the cydonia lasts probably about one month and it is followed immediately by the flowering almonds. There are several varieties producing good, durable flowers. None of the paper-shelled sort are of any value for this purpose. The hard-shelled or seedlings are much better, as their blooms are much more lasting. The double flowered almonds are in great demand, but as we have only a limited supply of the trees in this country a great many of the public are unacquainted with them. The almonds flower about two weeks and give way to the cherries, which at the present writing are in full swing. Almost any of the cultivated varieties make magnificent spikes for cutting, although the red fruited varieties usually have a greater profusion of large flowers than the black kinds. We have many magnificent specimens of the various white and pink flowered double dwarf cherries here, but they are not grown commercially for the blossoms. The cherries, when cut, are very lasting. The plums and prunes follow the cherries, and while both look beautiful when growing in the orchard, are the poorest of all fruit blossoms to hold together and unless for a very short decoration they are seldom used.

The double flowered plums have the same scarcity here, as we have but few specimen trees to cut from. With peaches the wild varieties only are of much value. With the double kinds we had quite a showing this season and they were in great demand—both the pink and white colors. Crab apple blossoms sell well and double flowered pears, but to the orchard varieties there is little stability, and they are difficult to handle. Some kinds of apples make magnificent clusters of bloom and find ready sale at good prices. They last well over into May and are the latest of the fruit flowers to be used by the florist. G.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June 13-15, 1906.

THE Aurora Nursery Co., Aurora, Ill., has certified to an increase in capital stock from $5,000 to $25,000.

EDW. WISEMAN, Elgin, Scotland, says the crop of seeds of Scotch fir was rather more than was anticipated.

A. S. WOOLLEY, secretary of the Elizabeth Nursery Co., Elizabeth, N. J., has recently returned from a trip to Cuba.

It is reported that The W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, leading seedsmen, will establish a large nursery of ornamental stock.

THE Holland nurserymen, now on their annual trips in this country, report their bookings on hardy stock the best they have ever taken.

THE Koster blue spruce is one of the most salable items on the lists of the European travelers. There are several large stocks of it in Holland.

MOST of the shipments of French nursery stock have come to hand in first-class order. French methods of packing have improved considerably in the past few years and shipments caught in the recent zero weather in the east generally escaped injury.

THERE is hope of securing a more uniform method of certification as to inspection of nursery stock intended for interstate shipment. The state inspectors realize that it would lighten their labors and save them, as well as the nurserymen, many troubles.

THE Wisconsin State Horticultural Society, through its secretary, Frederic Craneheld, of Madison, is advertising that it in no way guarantees or indorses any nursery and warns all buyers against a nursery, not named, said to be soliciting business on claims to that effect.

THE cold weather put a stop to planting operations which had been begun in the territory north of the Ohio.

THERE is in an Illinois town a woman who is this season having undone the landscape work of a few years ago and a new planting made at an expense of $10,000, so her front yard "won't look like the entrance to a cemetery."

A CANADIAN fruit grower was recently convicted of having in his possession fifty barrels of apples marked XXX., but which were below the standard required. The chief of the fruit division said that the man who deliberately marked packages falsely committed a crime against society. The magistrate imposed a fine of $50 and costs.

DENISON, TEX.—T. V. Munson, of the Munson nursery, says that all the fruit in bud was killed by the heavy frost March 19. C. E. Stephens, of the Iron Ore Nursery, says the fruit prospects were entirely destroyed by the freeze, so far as peaches and other budding fruits are concerned. Berries and other small fruits, of course, are safe, not being so far advanced.

MANNING'S MONOGRAPHS are a quite distinct departure from the usual run of nursery advertising. No. 2, just issued, contains thirty-two handsomely printed and well illustrated pages on hardy rhododendrons, azaleas and the mountain laurel. The subjects are treated in a most complete and interesting way and without a suggestion of an effort to sell plants; all that is confined to four pages of prices in the back of the pamphlet.

THE wholesale deliveries for the season are pretty well over and the business foots up to a very satisfactory total with all the growers and importers. In recent years, since frost proof storage houses have become so common, the fall business has been growing more rapidly than the spring trade, especially with the big growers of fruit trees. There are surpluses in a few lines, but nothing of notable extent and no more than is to be expected; the bonfires never can be wholly eliminated.

LOSS OF NURSERY STOCK.

Many reports are coming to hand of losses of nursery stock caught in transit by the recent change to cold weather. Following a period of springlike temperatures, the middle states have had in the past fortnight the most wintry weather of the season. In parts of Ohio there was more than a foot of snow and in New England temperatures considerably below zero were registered. As the nursery business was in full blast, many shipments were in transit, and those which had been carelessly packed were in many cases received in such condition that they were valueless. The stock from the south suffered especially. Quite a number of shipments are reported that were packed in unlined cases and shipped north in ordinary freight cars as though the danger of frost were wholly past.

BEST NEW ENGLAND VARIETIES.

Having been for over fifty years actively engaged in the nursery business, with my father and grandfather both in the same business in this town and in Old Newbury, it may be excusable in me to offer a few suggestions to those of less experience.

As we are about forty miles north of Boston, we have the full benefit of a northern climate. Trees and shrubs that are considered hardy 200 miles south of us are not wholly reliable here. We recommend in our catalogues only those which, after a series of years, have proved hardy throughout this part of New England and in the same latitude west of us. We have also made a study of those trees, both evergreen and deciduous, which are best adapted to the seacoast, as our trade of late years has been very largely with residents of the North Shore, all the way from Boston to Bar Harbor.

First of all, as a tree indigenous to our northern country, I will mention the sugar maple as the best, everything considered, of all ornamental trees. As a street tree in town and village, or planted along our country roads, it stands at the head, both for beauty and profit; beautiful in shape and foliage, not liable to be broken by winds or ice—less subject to and more easily kept clean of all insects and diseases. It is the tree for planting on the "run-out farms" of New England for sugar orchards, which will in a few years become very profitable. Of the other maples, the Norway maple is a very handsome, desirable tree, better adapted to the seashore than the sugar maple. Varieties of this are very handsome, as the Schwedlerii, with crimson foliage in spring; Reitenbachi and Geneva, handsome bronze and purple foliage in autumn.

The American sweet chestnut is a profitable tree to plant for timber and fruit. It can be planted quite thickly on any high, bleak land, and in a few years will pay good interest on the investment. All of ours we grew from large, selected northern nuts—every way better than the small southern ones. The American beech, when grown in a suitable, rich, moist soil is called the queen of trees. If planted in the fall, or very early in spring, it is quite sure to live. The American white ash is a valuable tree, both as a street tree and for shade and timber. The American elm everyone knows and admires, but it requires large space and a long time to develop, and is more subject to insects than most other trees. There are several hardy magnolias, which, with a little shelter and preparation of the soil, are unsurpassed in beauty, not only when in bloom in spring, but for their stately growth and ample foliage.

Among evergreens I would name the white pine (Pinus strobus) as the most valuable evergreen in this or any other country. But the white pine forests of our northern states are fast disappearing. Old growth of white pine lumber is now worth three times as much as thirty years ago. Our national government, forestry associations, and people generally are waking up to the importance of this work; and it is to be presumed that more effort will be made to preserve our forest land and plant out large areas to trees in the next twenty-five years than has ever been done in this country before. Several public-spirited men during the last few years have planted large tracts of vacant land in the states of Vermont and New Hampshire with white pines, and they consider it a profitable investment.

The concolor fir, from the high peaks of the Rocky mountains, is a very beautiful tree, perfectly hardy in New England, and probably the handsomest evergreen tree ever introduced here. It is well adapted to the seashore, and will flourish within a few rods of the ocean. Being difficult to transplant, it should be handled with great care. The Douglas, pungens and Engelmann spruces, all from the Rocky mountains, are very valuable and deserving of a place in the best grounds. The American white spruce, too, is a tree of rare beauty, not half enough appreciated.

I have only space to mention a few valuable native shrubs, which have in the past been very much neglected, and which can be grown by any one who will use the proper conditions. First the mountain laurel, Kalmia latifolia, than which there is no better evergreen shrub in America. It is found growing wild in many of the southern states, and in favorable locations all through the north. It is generally found growing in the shade of other trees, oftener on a north hillside. Although we grow it by the thousand without shelter in our nurseries, it is in every way better in growth and foliage if shaded somewhat from the noonday sun. It will grow in any ordinary soil, and once planted it is "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." The same conditions apply to our two native rhododendrons, the maximum and catawbiense, only they may require more moisture and a better preparation of the soil.

Of our five native azaleas, the arborescens, the Calendulacea (lutea) and the Vaseyi are the finest, and should be used extensively. T. C. THURLOW.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Current Comment.

This section was visited last Sunday night by the heaviest snow storm it has experienced for years. While some damage was done in the city, through roofs giving way because of the weight of snow, the florists were fortunate and escaped without loss. Street car travel was demoralized and getting about with wagons was hard work.

What with the bad weather and Lent, trade in all lines suffered. The Tomlinson market took a decided slump and both plants and cut flowers went begging. On Saturday, especially, the market was glutted with carnations.

Henry Hack, second son of William Hack, has been home on a furlough. He returned to his ship, the Charlestown, last week. Judging by his looks a "life on the ocean wave" suits him.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Association will be held April 3, at which time final arrangements will be made for the show to be held April 9. The committee has been very successful in getting subscriptions, so all we need to make it a great success will be fine weather.

The prospects for Easter stock are good so far as bulbs and plants are concerned. Roses and carnations will not be overplentiful, as most of the growers will be caught between crops. S.

DAYTON, O.—Joseph W. Furst has purchased the establishment of N. Metz at Roy and Harker streets. The transfer was consummated March 14.

CUT IT OUT.

Advertisers are urged to cut out of their advertisements in the REVIEW any items of stock on which they are running low. Remember that the REVIEW is printed every Wednesday. Write so that your letter will be received on Tuesday, directing that items nearly sold out be omitted. Don't wait until you are completely sold out; orders will keep coming. Don't neglect it. You will be at no greater trouble to change your advertisement in the REVIEW than you will be to send back money—besides, you know how it would disappoint you to order stock and a week or so later, instead of getting the goods, have the money returned. Then, if the same stock is listed in the advertisement in the next REVIEW, what would you think? Cut it out!

DAYTON, OHIO.

The Dayton Florists' Club held its weekly meeting March 19 with J. B. Heiss in the chair. A resolution of sorrow was passed on account of the death of our pioneer landscape gardener, Charles Beek, of the Soldiers' Home. The rest of the evening was taken up in discussing the arrangements of the coming convention of the Society of American Florists. The national committee realizes the fact that at last it will have ample room. Great satisfaction was shown when the report was read, that all the largest nurserymen are enthusiastic at the opportunity to exhibit at the fair grounds. The appointed landscape gardener, under the direction of Mr. Freudenberger, will have his hands full as soon as the snow goes away.

There was loud applause when Mr. Heiss told the club that the city of Dayton had given free use of water at the fair grounds until September 1, and that the Dayton Lighting Co. had most liberally consented to give light free during the four nights of the convention.

The National Cash Register Co. has announced that it wishes to entertain the visitors to the convention. A local committee will meet some day this week in conference with the head officials to formulate plans.

I SHALL not be without the REVIEW.—

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Last week was very quiet for the trade as compared with the earlier part of the season. The usual spring epidemic of price cutting has struck the town and has demoralized the market.

It would be a hard matter to say what the retail market price is on any line of flowers, as they are being sold at all kinds of prices. The department stores on last Saturday sold carnations as low, in some cases, as 1 cent each and violets for 7 cents a bunch. Roses are selling from $3 to $6 at wholesale. Bulbous stock is holding its own and there is no trouble in disposing of it. In fact, all kinds of bulb stock has sold better this season than for several years. The prospect for a plentiful supply of stock for Easter is very good.

Various Notes.

Among the growers who intend to build this summer is Ed A. Humfeld. He will erect a house 25x90 to be used principally as a forcing house for lilies and bulbous stock. Mr. Humfeld's business has increased to such an extent that he finds his present area of glass entirely too small.

The Western Cut Flower Commission Co. has gone out of business, after a very brief existence.

W. A. Bastian has opened a commission house of his own at Thirteenth street and Baltimore avenue. He will be the sole owner, and as he has been assured the support of practically all the leading dealers of the city, we see no reason why he should not succeed.

Miss M. Dalley reports business as being very good with her, considering the season. KAY-SEE.

BELLEVUE, O.—I. Husbands has had experience with primula poisoning and recommends the following as an effective remedy: Bathe the hands for two dressings, one each evening, in a strong solution of saleratus.

CLEVELAND, O.—William H. Gaffney, at 2505 Superior street, and Ernest Call, chauffeur for William H. Boardman, of 950 Euclid avenue, indulged in fisticuffs near the Superior arcade. The two men were taken to Central police station. Gaffney charged Call with attempting to run him down with an electric brougham, and a battle of words quickly became a physical encounter. No damage was done.

Some People have taken our advice as published in these columns recently and are buying My Maryland for trial. We reiterate here—if it succeeds with you as it does with us, it will prove the best white carnation you ever grew. Despite the variety's apparent failure in several places, we strongly advise all growers to give it a trial. We have been frank about its faults as developed in other places. We doubt if these will develop in many places.

Jessica we believe, will succeed generally and will prove to be the best red and white variegated ever disseminated. Few varieties show as strong constitution as this one does and it is a wonderful producer. Extra fine stock of both varieties ready now. R. C., $2.50 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. ROCHESTER.

Last week business was rather slow. Naturally, some reason had to be found and Lent got the brunt of it, whether guilty or otherwise. All sorts of stock dragged, including the much abused daffodil. Well, honestly, it was the worst sinner in the bunch. People did not give afternoon teas, get married or die. Hence the doleful expression on the countenances of our local trade. This week, however, things have assumed a rosier hue and the prospects are happier.

I had a chance last week to have a look at J. B. Keller's Sons' establishment. Everything is in healthy condition, promising well for Easter wealth, and the florists, not only in Rochester but elsewhere, can stand all the profits coming their way. Keller's folks grow a large variety of plants and the product is immense in quantity as well as quality. Bulbous stock as well as rhododendrons, azaleas, lilacs, genistas, spiraeas, etc., all speak highly for the growers' care.

George Hart predicts a good Easter trade, and at present, among other cut flowers, is receiving some extra choice Beauties, hyacinths, tulips, sweet peas, mignonette, all coming in large lots.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Pittsburg has been experiencing the most wintry weather of the year, but nevertheless stock has been coming in more plentifully each day. Roses and carnations are feeling the effect and prices are getting lower and lower. A few of the growers are in the midst of a crop, and by the time Easter reaches them their crops will be about off, but there is no fear of a scarcity in anything except smilax, which drops out of sight about this time every year. The general trade is about the same as last year.

Various Notes.

Fred Zieger, who has been with Chas. T. Siebert for several years, has returned to his old home in Germany to assist his father in business. He says he expects to return, possibly in a year, as he likes this country and especially Pittsburg.

L. L. Lamborn, of Alliance, O., was in the city the past week looking things over. He sold his retail store and the greenhouses connected with it, about 50,000 square feet of glass, to Miller & Cogle, formerly of Salem, O. He still retains his old plant, 50,000 square feet, and is adding 25,000 square feet to it. He also runs a retail store in Canton, O.

Fred Burki is doing jury duty. He says he is not stuck on it, but believes it every good citizen's duty and is resigned.

J. J. Fuchs is out with a new wagon.

Geo. Marshall, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., is confined to his home on account of illness.

Pollites, who had the stand in the Arcade, closed up last Saturday, but the stand will reopen in a few days under new management.

Anton Krut, of Butler, Pa., will have his new store on Main street ready to open April 1. Hoo-Hoo.

PARK RIDGE, ILL.—Chas. Raupach plans to sell out and retire from business.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—Two greenhouses on the farm of William E. Lacy, between Florence and Northampton, were destroyed by fire March 16.

CASH VS. ANY TIME.

I am a large buyer from a cut flower commission house, and pay cash for my goods. I understand there are a number dealing with the same firm who pay their accounts to suit their convenience, thus getting an advantage over me. This seems to me to be an injustice to the cash purchaser, and is no incentive for him to pay promptly, as there is no discount for his money. The up-to-date business man takes the advantage of discounts and runs his affairs as near the cash basis as possible. Wholesale concerns in other lines with few exceptions are offering inducements to pay cash. Why not the wholesale commission flower houses? I would be pleased to hear through your paper the conditions that exist in the larger wholesale districts in reference to the above subject.

SUBSCRIBER.

Enquiries to which, as in this case, no name is signed are not as a rule entitled to notice, but it seems timely to remark that Subscriber probably has not given his wholesaler a basis for granting him credit, in consequence of which he is required to pay cash, or else Subscriber is overlooking very obvious benefits which he is receiving or might secure, by paying cash when he is entitled to have credit. There is no line of business in which the cash customer does not have the advantage of the one who is slow pay. But it must be borne in mind that the man whose purchases are charged but who pays promptly when the account is presented is the same as a cash customer. In fact, he is regarded as the best possible kind of customer; his business is on a sound basis and very likely to grow.

The cash customer is almost always able to buy cheaper than the one who is slow pay. It is a common occurrence for the slow man to find wholesale cut flower prices unexpectedly stiff day after day; gradually it dawns upon him that it is the wholesaler's gentle way of saying that the account is as large as seems desirable. But he cannot go elsewhere; to transfer his patronage, or a large part of it, would be to tell the whole story to any wide-awake wholesaler. You may well believe that a man who pays at any time that he pleases, rather than when the bills are due, pays the wholesaler more than interest on the money.

The cash buyer is not tied down. He need not continue to patronize a house where he feels that his business and his business-like methods, are not appreciated. He can and doubtless does buy where he can get for the least money the stock best suited to his needs. He should be satisfied with that; he is wasting his time worrying over the "advantages" of the man who is slow pay; he has no advantages.

BEGONIA AMABILIS.

This was one of the most interesting plants seen at the last meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society, says the Horticultural Advertiser. We have heard so much about the non-fertility of Gloire de Lorraine, that some may doubt the genuineness of seedlings from it. Well, with the above it may not be quite correct to say that it is from Lorraine, but it was the result of seed saved from one of the sports from that well known variety, and a curious thing is that this sport has occurred with several growers. H. B. May was the first to show it under the name of Masterpiece, but it has since been shown under other names. T. Rochford & Sons, however, adopted the name Masterpiece, and it is to them we owe the new variety, Amabilis. Masterpiece produced female flowers last spring, and these were fertilized with pollen from Socotrana. The plants raised from the seed varied but little, the most distinct character being the peltate leaves, which are also larger than in Lorraine. The plants shown, which were only about four months old, had thick flower stems, and the flowers were the same pleasing shade of pink as the parent, but appeared of better substance, and give great promise of making a more vigorous grower altogether.

A remarkable point is that in a number of seedlings there should be so little variation. There is one fact, however, which should be of interest; that is, a sport from Lorraine has proved fertile, and we may now hope for further results from the same parent. The name Amabilis may be appropriate, but we have a species which came from Assam in 1859 under the same name, and this may cause some confusion.

ENGLISH TULIPS.

It seems possible that our old English cottage garden species, and the improved varieties from them, may prove amenable to forcing, says the Horticultural Advertiser. W. T. Ware, of Bath, sends flowers of Scarlet Emperor, a variety for which he was awarded a first-class certificate; this, though belonging to the May-flowering type, has forced well, the large flowers were very bright and had long stems, just the sort of thing we want for superior work, for when the ordinary scarlet varieties are seen in every shop window, and in the streets, they are not much appreciated for choice work, and the florists have to look for something better.

I come in contact with a great many of the leading florists, and I find their aims invariably are to get flowers of superior quality, even if they pay much higher prices. There appears to be a considerable difference in the culture of tulips. Of course the quality of bulbs makes some difference, yet there is also much to be gained by good culture and the selection of the best sorts.

PULVERIZED SHEEP MANURE

One of the most effective of fertilizers and largely used by the best growers, both as a top dressing and in the manure tanks. A trial order will convince the most skeptical of the superiority of our brand. It is the Pure Sheep Manure. No dirt, no weed seeds, nothing but what will give results. WEALTH IN WORMS.

Newspapers throughout the country are printing the following story referring to Carl Beers, the well-known florist of Bangor, Me.:

"By far the most popular bait for all kinds of fishing in Maine is living earthworms, which have the odor of the ground about them and which seem to be choice tidbits, not only for trout and landlocked salmon, but also for pickerel, perch, black bass and, indeed, every species of food fish that swims in fresh water. As the Maine soil is deficient in humus and lacking in decaying vegetable matter, angworms are not plentiful.

"More than ten years ago Carl Beers, a florist of Bangor, went into the business of rearing earth worms for the purpose of selling them to the local fishermen, as well as for shipment to Boston. He imported a breed of dark purple worms from Belgium, which were prolific breeders, though coarse and strong flavored, and later he secured a box of giant angworms from India. In the course of a few years he was able to supply live worms by the million to his customers.

"Those shipped to Boston were sold in job lots for 75 cents a pound. To the home customers he sold worms of average size for 10 cents a dozen. Though his greenhouse was a small one, and though his trade in flowers was never extensive, he made money rapidly from the sale of worms, until last year, when he retired and went to his old home in Sweden, a wealthy man."

SHOULD DIVIDE MANIFOLD.

In a house 20x65 feet I have a manifold of four 2-inch pipes connected with the boiler by 3-inch flow and return pipes. The return at the junction with the manifold is five feet above the bottom of the boiler and the flow at the junction with the manifold is seven feet higher than the bottom of the boiler. My boiler is ample to heat the four runs of 2-inch pipe, hot-water, but the inside run of pipe does not heat up well. What alterations must I make to heat all the pipes hot? The pipes are flat up under the outside benches.

C. W.

If you divide the present manifold, consisting of four pipes into two manifolds containing two pipes each and carry an independent 2-inch riser to each of them from each of the two outlets in the boiler, I think you will have no further difficulty in securing a satisfactory circulation, if, as you say, the boiler has sufficient capacity for the work.

L. C. C.

PIPING TWO HOUSES.

Will you please tell me about the houses I want to build? There will be two houses 20x100 feet, ten feet to ridge, four feet above the ground, for carnations and one for violets, running north and south, boiler shed on the north side. How many pipes will I need and how can I best place them with solid benches in the houses? It goes sometimes to about 15 degrees below zero here.

P. S.

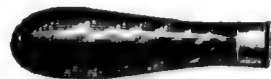

The two houses you contemplate constructing will require the following piping: The violet house may be piped with nine 2-inch pipes, the length of the house if hot water is used. A good plan would be to run a 2½-inch riser under the ridge to the south end of the house, there divide it to return by four 2-inch pipes on each side wall, arranging the coils so as to give sufficient fall in the length of the house. This will give slightly more radiation than the nine 2-inch pipes, but will provide a better distribution. The carnation house will be less satisfactory with solid beds and more difficult to arrange a satisfactory distribution of pipes. This house should have a 3-inch flow and twelve 2-inch returns, six on each side wall, or four on each side wall and four placed elsewhere, say two in each walk on the boards forming the sides of the benches. Your boiler to handle this equipment with safety and satisfaction should be rated to carry 2,000 square feet of radiation.

EASY WEEDER

THE WEEDER FOR FLORISTS

The inner edge is sharp. Its oval shape permits the operator to weed behind the plants while standing in front. The pushing edge is thin enough to work easily through the soil, but too dull to damage the stems of the plants should it come in contact with them.

It takes out the weeds and leaves the surface smooth. What's more, it does all the work so rapid it will pay for itself in one day's use.

CARNATION AND ROSE HOUSES.

I expect to erect a greenhouse and would ask about the piping. The carnation house will be 18x60 feet and contain 1,440 square feet of glass, and the rose house will be 18x30 feet and contain 720 square feet of glass. The 3-inch flow pipes will enter the rose house under the bench and, rising a foot, supply five runs of pipe going around the house with proper fall, while a continuation of this 3-inch flow will go under the walk to the center bed and again rise a foot to supply two runs under the center bed. The carnation house is laid out in the same way: one 3-inch return for the whole system. I prefer to have all the pipes under the benches. Is this piping satisfactory? Would a hot-water boiler rated as having 1,300 square feet of gross radiation be too large for this plant? F. D. B.

I believe that with hot-water under pressure you will receive better service if you carry the flow from the boiler to the farther side of the house and there break it up to supply the five returns under the bench, arranging the return at the point you now propose to place the flow pipe. The present system gives the hot-water from the boiler at a point where the house is protected and leaves the cooler returns on the exposed side of the house; by reversing the system as suggested, the hottest water will be carried to a distant point to supply pipes on the exposed side of the building. If 1½-inch pipes are to be used, the piping planned will be satisfactory except that the runs in the 60-foot house are too long, nearly 140 feet; long circuits of this sort are not desirable. If 2-inch pipe is used 280 feet will supply the rose house and 692 feet the carnation house with the necessary radiation. L. C. C.

THE MATTER OF DURABILITY

The lasting qualities of a greenhouse is another vital point—it's the point that should be figured in with first cost. Each year's cost of repairs actually makes your greenhouse cost just that much more.

And Still More Paint Talk

IT WAS LAST WEEK WE TALKED ABOUT PULP-GROUND LEADS AND OUR BONE-DRY LEAD AND THE WAY WE GROUND IT IN OIL AFTER ITS THOROUGH KILN-DRYING

Besides a lot of other things that go to make up a greenhouse paint that can be guaranteed not to mildew, peel or crack off if properly applied. Now a word about the oil we use in this paint. Perhaps you have bought the very best so-called refined linseed oil which is treated with an acid to bleach and refine it. Right here you made a mistake. This very refining process takes certain life from the oil and leaves it with an amount of acid which more or less affects the lead. Every gallon of oil we use is pure, raw linseed, which we place in immense vats, containing thousands of gallons, and there left to settle a full four to six weeks. This oil is now thoroughly free from all impurities, and for some reason known only to chemists, has sort of cured itself so it incorporates more evenly with the white lead. Then this is the kind of oil we grind with our bone-dried lead, making the kind of paint which overcomes all those discouraging things which you had to contend with.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

EASTER ARRANGEMENTS.

The Tasteful Use of Accessories.

The trend of public taste has been such in recent years that it is next to impossible to sell stock, especially at a holiday, unless it is embellished with one or another of the many requisites which the ingenuity of the supply dealers has placed at the command of the decorators. The general adoption of these aids has educated the public to expect them, and the retailer who fails to avail himself of the wealth of such material cannot hope to do a first-class business.

With the aid of the baskets, hampers, ribbons and other accessories quite common plants may be given new and much more attractive form and find a sale at prices which they could not otherwise command. Take, for instance, the illustration of lily of the valley in this issue. Here is a receptacle made to suggest an Easter egg. It stands slightly inclined to the front. A pan is provided to retain the moisture. In such a receptacle lily of the valley presents a new appearance. With the addition of chiffon and an Easter chick the piece is given a selling value which not only pays a profit on the accessories but gives a return for the valley which is several times what it would have had in its natural state.

Profitable and Satisfying.

And take then the primula shown in another illustration. This is Primula veris, pale yellow with darker center. It is not an especially well grown plant and would be classed among the cheaper items of stock. Set into one of these receptacles, with a couple of ducklings peeping out, its selling value is far beyond the cost and much above the profit which could be realized without the receptacle. And, above all, the buyer is pleased.

Twig Baskets.

One of the most popular things shown last year was the twig basket and it will have a much wider sale this season. The basket is made in innumerable forms, both with and without handles. One of the accompanying illustrations shows such a basket, of course with a metal pan inside, planted with hyacinths. Small plants of Asparagus plumosus are used as an edging, with willow twigs to add to the spring-time appearance. This of course was not complete without the addition of the bow of chiffon, yards upon yards of which are used at each holiday in every up-to-date retail store.

For Ungainly Plants.

The average plant of genista would be unsalable without some form of embellishment and that is certainly true of the specimen illustrated. The top of the plant is all right, but the long, lanky, bare based character of the growth would preclude a profitable sale if it were not for the addition of the asparagus and chiffon as well as the pot cover.

Credit Due Supply Dealers.

The competition among the supply dealers has had the result of stimulating their efforts to secure novelties. It is such a wide variety in the line of florists' supplies that it is almost impossible for any retailer to buy or use them all. But he is neglecting his best interests who fails to offer his Easter stock embellished to the best of his artistic ability with such a selection of these requisites as the character of his trade requires. There are expensive things for high priced stores; there are inexpensive pot covers, baskets, hampers, ribbons, etc., for those whose trade puts a limit on price.

THE PLANT DISPLAY.

How best to arrange potted plants for a holiday display and yet waste no space is no easy problem. As one arranges for is an undoubted aid to their business, as well as to the business of every retail florist, to be able to offer something which cannot be obtained of "the other fellow." The result has been that there his Easter plant sales it will readily be seen that a mixture of everything and every color is the most difficult to choose from. Plants should be so placed as to enable the customer to get a good view of a specimen of each kind without having to handle the plants.

We will suppose the stock includes Easter lilies, callas, cineraria, primroses, spiraeas, azaleas, hyacinths, tulips, ferns, palms, lilacs, genistas, roses, etc. Have plenty of plant stands and pedestals of various heights, from a foot and a half to five feet, and as many low tables as space will allow. Have some of them quite low. First classify the collection as to kind; for instance, have a table of hyacinths and a group of azaleas, etc. Then arrange or separate the kinds of plants as to color, placing purple and lavender hyacinths at one side of the group. Scattered among the light purple let a few white be seen. Then group the white close together, add a few light pink and work in the deeper pinks towards the opposite side.

The effect of the whole is not only pleasing, but after a customer locates his favorite color he can more quickly make his choice as to the plant he desires.

At a convenient distance have a group of Easter lilies with palms and ferns interspersed. These should be ranged from the height of the plant on the floor to one upon a tall stand. The group may be crowned by a large palm. Toward

Most of them look better on the floor or on a low platform.

Care should be taken not only to preserve color harmony between the plants of different colors in the same group, but also between the groups. Separate clashing colors by a bunch of green or white. Place the purples and scarlets at the ends of the display space.

It will soon be noted that the plants which stand apart sell most quickly. Pot receptacles do not always sell themselves, but they sell the plants and are therefore a good investment.

Let the pot covers be plain and quiet, the less ribbon the better.

A chiffon bow or ribbon is admirable on a basket handle, but it should be well chosen and in close harmony with the basket's contents. Where the contents of a plant basket looks too solid set a slender vase on one side close to the handle and fill with some slender spray flowers, like snapdragon or spiraea. Often the combination will sell.

Of course all this means extra thought and care, but it pays. Plants with a little thought put upon their appearance and arrangement will easily bring a better price than an ill assorted lot of even better quality.

GERTRUDE BLAIR.

The Conventional Form of Azalea.

the edge of the lily group begin to introduce a bright bit of color in the way of a pink azalea. Next group the azaleas, grading the colors from dark to light, setting aside some odd color for a more convenient place.

Leave space enough between the different groups for the salesman to walk around and reach individual plants. Azaleas should not be staged very high.

AZALEAS FOR EASTER.

The accompanying illustrations show Easter azaleas, one of them the well-known, flat-headed form of which hundreds of thousands are sold every season. This is a typical plant, fairly well flowered, well shaped in the conventional form, with the pan resting in one of the popular pot covers and tied with a big bow of satin ribbon.

While such plants as these are the ones which sell in greatest quantity, such plants as are shown in the second illustration have taken a firm hold on the public favor and are called for in greater quantities each season. A leading Chicago retailer already has such a plant in his window with a card, "The new pyramidal azalea, the greatest novelty of the season." As a matter of fact such plants invariably attract the attention of visitors through the fact that the average customer has not seen plants of this shape.

The plant illustrated was a most attractive specimen. It is profusely flowered and the flowers are uniformly distributed on all sides of the plant. The one defect is that the plant was not quite straight, nor could the top be made to stand quite erect by staking. The addition of the pot cover and the chiffon was, of course, necessary to make the plant ready for sale. As a matter of fact, this plant was packed up last Easter by a leading Chicago retailer and shipped for a customer to an Iowa town, where it arrived safely.

THE ROSE BASKETS.

Reproduced in this issue are photographs of four of the fancy baskets in the Easter display, 1905, at the store of C. A. Samuelson, Chicago. These show the popular twig baskets in three styles and also show a fancy raffia hamper, zinc lined, with lid only partially visible in the illustration. With Mr. Samuelson these baskets were among the best selling specialties for Easter. They naturally brought good prices because they were worth it and because Mr. Samuelson's trade calls for the best.

The material used in each of these baskets was the Clothilde Soupert rose with Baby Ramblers. In some of the baskets the pussywillow is seen and also a little selaginella, a few small plants of cocus and some Asparagus plumosus.

The best selling baskets were those with the handle, but all were decorated with ribbon. In three of these specimens chiffon was used and on the other Persian silk ribbon, the figure being a pink rose. Last year Mr. Samuelson used large numbers of the Easter chickens, as shown in several of these handled baskets. They invariably made a hit with the ladies and children, and added not a little to the selling qualities of the many arrangements to which they were added.

TREATMENT FOR AZALEAS.

We would like to have you tell us the best method of caring for azaleas that are left on our somewhat inexperienced hands. Can they be readily managed so as to bloom well next season, or would it be cheaper to throw them away?

E. & B.

Many times have azaleas been alluded to in the columns of the REVIEW. There was a time when we believed that azaleas unsold at flowering time were not worth bothering with. We have, however, learned that this was a big mistake and now many of our best Easter azaleas are those plants carried over from last year. The individual flower is not quite so large, but the sure and great profusion of blossoms make the plants most attractive. Some varieties like Bernard Andre and Bernard Andre alba do not flower satisfactorily the first spring after importing and make much better plants the second year.

If the azalea plant is out of flower, pick off all old blossoms and the seed pods. Be sure of that. If a number of young growths have started you can pinch back the strongest and keep the plants in a temperature of 55 degrees to 60 degrees, with plenty of water at the roots and syringing daily. The growth they are then making is the flowering wood for next winter.

If you are in possession of any old plants that have been misused, for instance, on sale at a retail store for two weeks and kept another week in the rear of the store waiting for the wagon to take them back to the greenhouse—the sort of place where the wide-awake (?) shopmen have been so busy they had no time to give them a drop of water, thinking more of the arrangement of their hair or the crease in their pants than of the poor, thirsting plants; these plants will likely have lost their leaves and look pretty hard. They will quickly recover.

Take a sharp pair of shears and cut back not only the growth made last spring and summer, but back into the hard wood made two years ago. This hard wood will break out with a great number of growths. Keep them at from 55 degrees to 60 degrees with frequent syringing. About the first of June plunge them to the rim in a frame outdoors in the full sun. Some material like old hot-bed compost will do very well.

In the hottest months one watering a day may not be enough. Never let them suffer for water and when you do water with a hose give them as well a heavy, fierce syringing that will keep down spider, thrips, mealy bug, etc.

By the first of July put an inch of cow manure on the surface of the pots. It will do them much good. Bring into the house before any danger of early fall frosts. Spring is the principal time of growth with Azalea Indica and, therefore, they must not be crowded.

Where you have a black mud for soil or a sandy, peaty soil, occasionally seen, you can remove the plants from the pots and plant them out, as they do in Belgium, and lift and repot in fall, but I think you will find it better to keep them in pots.

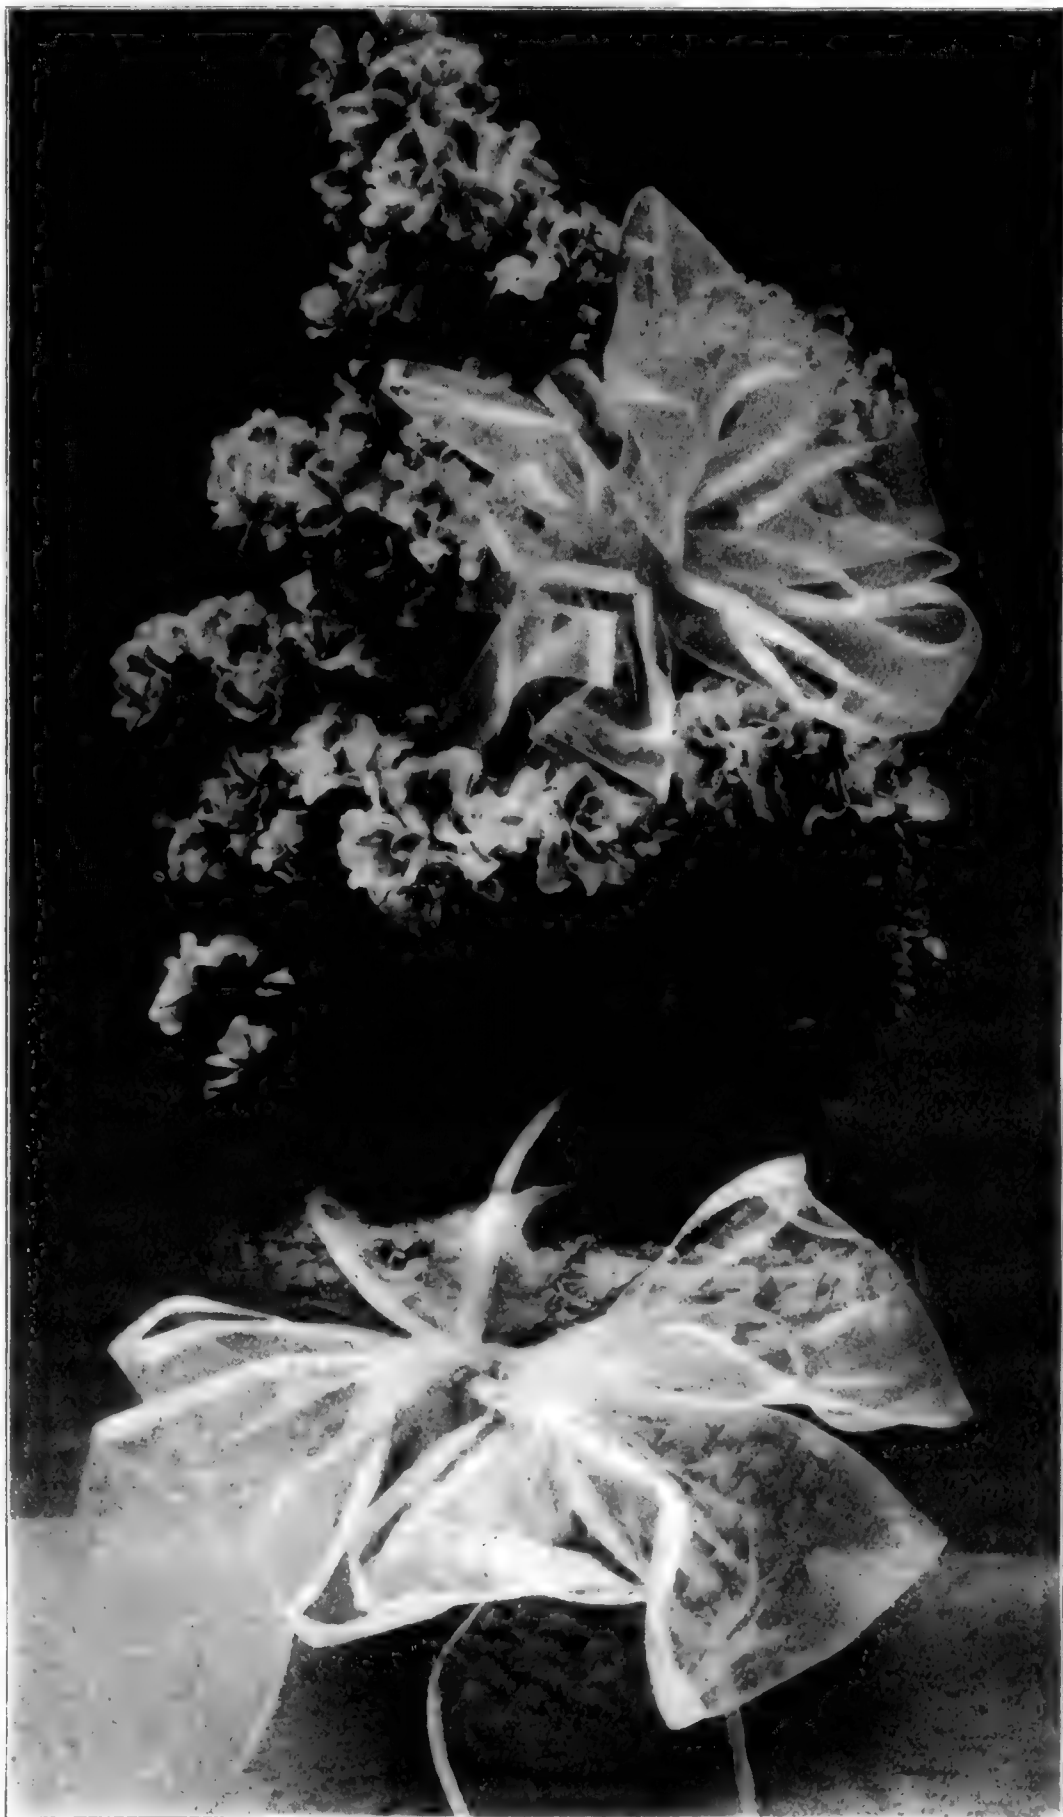

W. S.

CLOSE OF THE SEASON.

How quickly the seasons come and go! While our winters seem long as a whole, still it seems but a short time since we were making the last preparations for the violet season which the coming Easter time practically closes. Undoubtedly nearly every grower has already made a survey of the season in retrospect, and with the aid of his records of cut, sales, notes of stock, etc., is making his plans for the coming season.

Of course, the good grower will be continually planning the whole season through; however, as the season draws to its termination so will our plans, and then comes the work of pushing them forward energetically, lest the following season be no better than the last, or, perhaps, not quite so good. Your records of the number of varieties you grow and the number cut of each kind, together with the knowledge you have of what your customers most prefer, will be the greatest aids to you in determining what kinds to plant and the proportionate quantities. If you have been trusting to your memory for these details, it will be one of your wisest resolutions for the coming season to make a New Year resolve, even if late, to keep the records henceforth so that hereafter you will know where you are at.

Memory is Not Accurate.

I think I am safe in saying that none of us have good enough memories to carry these details accurately enough even to go by from year to year; certainly we cannot after the lapse of two or three seasons.

The man who makes a success of any business must pay close attention to details in every point, otherwise a leak, though small, in some one particular may be the cause of a failure to make a profit, even if he be so fortunate as to come out even, and I take it we are none of us in business for the sake of doing this.

I was reading the following only yesterday, which illustrates my point; yet how many violet growers can say definitely how much each plant costs them, how much it has produced in cash, how many blooms it has had for the season, and for each month:

A young coal mine operator, who before his thirtieth year had built up a property worth $500,000, was telling, in an indirect way, how he had made the $500,000. This was the way he put it:

"Most concerns that go to the wall nowadays fail because their managers don't know what they are doing. Sounds almost foolish, doesn't it? But I have seen mine owners and mine managers come and go—mostly go—good business men, shrewd, honest, pushers, good salesmen. If I asked ten of them the exact cost of mining a ton of coal in their mines on the preceding day every one of the ten would look at me in silent wonder and ignorance. Yet I have seen the margin of profit on coal so small that a difference of three cents a ton in the cost of mining meant the success or failure of the mine.

"I knew a mine that went broke because the mules had sore necks. The collars of the harnesses were not made just right; that chafed the skin; that delayed the little cars that carried the coal to the shafts; that reduced the output of the mine five per cent—and expenses were the same. If the manager of that mine had had daily reports the faulty collars would have chafed the mules' necks only one day.

"The mine manager who gets daily reports on mine costs and conditions need never fear more than twelve hours' loss; he will catch it on the following morning and can rectify it.

"In fact, I place that as the prime requisite of any success, close touch with details, both in place and in time."

I quote this not alone for violet growers, but as being good advice for the grower of all kinds of stock.

Use a Memorandum Book.

I will admit it is a little harder for the grower who is not making a spe-minutes, or that you will remember and jot it down next time. Of course, attention to all this will avail you naught if you do not observe the same painstaking care in the selection of your stock, then in keeping it in healthy condition as regards air, water, feed, etc.

The man who is not a specialist, but growing only a few borders or a single house of violets in connection with his other stock, quite likely will be surprised to find either that they have paid him better than he had any idea of; or, on the contrary, that they have been occupying room he could better employ for other crops and purchase his blooms of a specialist if he is within reasonable distance of one.

As in all kinds of plant growing, there are varied and constantly changing conditions to be met and reckoned with. Not always the least trying is such a winter as the one now drawing to a close; such rapid changes in the temperature are trying both to the plants and your temper, necessitating your stock for next season all rooted and well under way by this time, but, as we have so often remarked, do not neglect these plants now with the spring work and allow them to suffer for water, weeding, etc., or you will be liable to have nicely stunted poor stock when you do get around to them and thus find yourself handicapped as regards profit for next season. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure and the trouble is it seldom cures, so watch out. Keep them growing clean and healthy, remembering that there is no better place for them to acquire disease than to shove them under the edges of benches and such places, thinking you will keep them there only a few days. If they do not get diseased, they will get drawn and soft, so that when you come to plant out they will be soft and in poor health.

The best of care must be given them now, right along; extra care later cannot atone for past neglect. If the young plants are going to be planted in the house, without being planted in the field, it is well to be getting the house in order whenever you have a little spare time. If you have been growing other crops in it arrange it so as to have it empty some little time before you fill it for planting, so that you can properly clean it out, air it out, dry it out, fumigate it heavily several times; whitewash, lime, paint, repair and freshen it up generally.

This is the best time also for repairing or making any alterations in the heating system if it is not right for violets.

Another thing that you have to take extra care for now, as the days are getting warmer, is that the red-spider does not get a foothold; spraying must be carefully attended to to this end. One cannot rely on that alone without looking carefully, as they can get quite a start ere it is noticeable if you do not examine the under surfaces of the leaves often. It is next to impossible to get rid of them absolutely if once they get started. One is so apt to overwater and so hurt the plants even if he does eradicate the red-spider.

But enough of this for this time, for "everybody works at our house" when Easter comes and probably you are no exception to the rule, and just hustling yourself in preparation for this, the close of the violet season. While I hope it has been a good one, I can sincerely say I hope your next will be much better and I believe it will be if the proper vigilance and care be exercised.

R. E. SHUPHELT.

THE COAL STRIKE.

Monday, April 2, marked the beginning of the long predicted coal strike, half a million miners in both the bituminous and anthracite fields going out. Indications point to a long drawn out struggle, with much consequent injury to trade and industry in all directions. In a few instances operators have agreed to the scale demanded by the miners and the men have resumed work. These are exceptional, however, and limited almost entirely to the bituminous localities.

The florist's fuel bill is his big item of expense and developments in the present crisis are watched with interest. Evidence of the large consumption of coal by the grower is found in the statement that one greenhouse proprietor during the last year bought 7,000 tons of Pocahontas for use in his establishment.

Basket of Clothilde Soupert and Baby Rambler Roses.

cialty of violets to keep accurate tab on the labor item; however, that can be done in a fairly accurate way if you keep a memorandum book tied with a string at the door and put down date and hour every time you work at them; it is well to have the pencil also attached to the book by a cord, or you will frequently find yourself without it, and then you think it was only a few constant watchfulness in regard to water, air, heat, etc., let alone your inability to hold your pickings as regular as you wish, bringing them on rapidly today and choking them off tomorrow, when you may have a large order booked.

Watch Next Season's Stock.

It is to be supposed that you have

Local authorities assert there is coal on hand in Chicago sufficient to last less than two months and that the crippling of business due to the shortage will prove serious if the strike is prolonged.

DOUBTS VALUE OF NEW BILL.

The proposed bill to authorize the registration of names of horticultural products might be likened to a prism, giving forth many tints but, unfortunately, most of them being of somber hue.

I can see no objection to the registration and protection of names applied to novelties, although the department in charge would have some difficulty in compiling a list of those now appropriated to some species of plants.

I doubt the feasibility of a procedure such as set forth in section II, where it is proposed to give exclusive right to the registrant to propagate for a term of twenty years.

It must be taken into consideration that the bulk of the novelties are purchased for the purpose of putting them upon the market the second year; hence the question arises, would not the restriction from propagation deprive the originator of his first year's sales?

Further to illustrate this point we will suppose the Chicago Carnation Co. and the Thompson Carnation Co. each has a new variety both of which possesses equal merit. One of these firms registers its novelty so it has exclusive right to propagate for twenty years, which of course would restrict purchasers of this variety from propagating until the end of that time.

The other firm does not register the variety but offers it to the trade without restraint as to propagation. It is my opinion the latter firm would outstrip the former in volume of sales. If publicity were given to the order books of such concerns, I am confident that those ordering from 1,000 to 50,000 would constitute the bulk of the orders, and, with rare exception, this stock is procured for the purpose of propagating and placing upon the market the second year, while the price is still fairly remunerative.

I imagine the firm originating a new variety and debarring the purchaser the right of propagation, would stand in its own light.

Another illustration: If we disseminate a new chrysanthemum, sending fifty plants each to 100 of the most prominent growers, and restrict them from propagation, the result would be they would be obliged to come back to the originator the second year for stock, and the price realized for the matured product at the close of the season would not warrant them in paying a fancy price the second year. Hence, the raiser, to induce demand, would be obliged to offer favorable terms and that is practically what he is doing now.

Assuming these same growers buy stock the second year, what check would the originator have on the number of plants they were actually growing without inspecting their stock? They might propagate thousands and take chances on being apprehended.

There is one other point which may cause some trouble. It is the tendency many varieties have to sport and there is the possibility of their sporting in two localities at or about the same time. Enchantress carnation has sported to white in several places and Mrs. Lawson to a light pink. The possessor of such a sport could register it and be entitled to a certain name but would be obliged to buy stock in the hands of others to control the situation. I do not see how the second party could be prevented from propagating his sport. It is true he would have no authority to use the registered name but if the two were identical it could be described as such, disposing of this stock without restriction as to propagation, and thus deprive the first party of the rights and privileges set forth in said act.

If such an act is to be made law I would certainly recommend that the term of twenty years be changed to two years. In such an event the originator would have control of the stock the second year, and could arrange with those holding stock to propagate on his account, thus controlling the price. A period longer than two years might be advisable in the case of some species which are slow of propagation.

The originator of a new variety practically holds a patent until he places it upon the market and most firms interested in novelties generally work up sufficient stock to meet the demand before it is offered to the public.

To secure sales we must not only assure the purchaser but often prove beyond doubt the advantages of acquiring this new creation. This would be quite an undertaking if we restrict propagation. It would seem like a one sided proposition to benefit the first rather than the second party.

Those taking advantage of such an act as the one proposed would practically have a trust organized with a twenty year franchise. This would mean higher prices to the middle man (the grower) and if unable to propagate he must get his returns from the finished product, namely, the flowers.

Will the dear, good public pay the bill? That is the question for us to consider.

YELLOW AND BLUE.

Can someone tell me how to color white carnations to make them yellow and blue? I am anxious to have them for a class banquet, to match the class colors.

R. E. W.

Yellow carnations are to be had in the wholesale markets; as for dyeing them, almost as well use artificial flowers and be done with it. A far better way would be to use daffodils and violets.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

History of Easter.

We are within a few days of Flora's greatest festival. Easter has no such authentic evidence of antiquity as Christmas; that it existed as a festival among heathen nations or tribes, nor can you summon such an array of folk lore to embellish it. Yet there is good evidence that it was an important event ages before the sacred events occurred with which Christianity connects it.

Easter is not mentioned in the New Testament by any of the apostolic writers and the determination of the date on which it should be observed caused great ruptures in the early church. The Jewish Christians adhered to one date, the Latin and gentile Christians to another. Not till 325 A. D., when the so-called Constantine the Great called the Council of Nice together, was it agreed by all the prelates present that it should be observed universally on the same date; but they could not decide on any day or week, so it was referred to the astronomers of Alexandria, the seat of all astronomical learning. They only established that the day of the Crucifixion should be commemorated on a Friday and the Resurrection on the Sabbath. As late as the eighth century the churches of England and Ireland held the festival on March 21, the church of Italy on April 18, and Egypt a week later.

For centuries it was a bitter contention between the western church (Rome) and the eastern church (Constantinople), but finally the Roman church gave way to the eastern church, and this accounts for the great Russian nation differing from us and probably most of the Asiatic churches.

Respects to Constantine.

Before I close this brief theological screed I would like to pay my respects to the great Constantine, looked upon as the great patron saint of Christianity. He was born in Northumberland, England, and was the son of a Roman general of great ability as a warrior and despot. He dethroned two or three other profligates who posed as emperors of Rome and then marched on and built the great city of Constantinople. Personally, outside of his ability, he was a sensual brute, a loafer and several times a murderer, and only patronized Christianity because it was a step to temporal power.

What Matters It?

After all, what matters it about the date at this late day? We find Asiatic peoples murdering Jews, totally ignorant that the murder and resurrection of the Young Man whom they commemorate, the greatest and purest that ever lived, was a Jew himself.

No matter the date, the grand central fact is the world had an example of what we should all try to be. My own belief is if you "do unto others as you would they should do unto you," you have compassed all there is in religion and theology. Ecclesiasticism has caused more hypocrisy, cruelty, misery and murder than all other causes since feeble man's advent on this little sphere, but we are progressing fast.

The nineteenth century was a dandy. The emancipation of thought and conscience was greater in that century, a thousand fold, than are the material discoveries and inventions, such as locomotives, telegraph, telephone, etc. All of you agreeing with me, we will now get down to the practical.

The Modern Easter.

It is right and proper we should have the annual festivals. It makes torpid minds "sit up and think." The way in which this festival is kept is as diverse as the dates have been. In Russia it may be in killing Jews; in Germany in the growing of Easter or Ostern eggs, most likely a survival of the embryonic symbol of a new life (spring), and as Germany sticks to medieval mythology more than any other modern nation, it is quite harmless. In our own enlightened and blessed land it takes any form that will gratify the donor and receiver, and fortunately for our own sentimental business, it has for a number of years taken the form of an exchange of nature's products—a pretty plant or bunch of flowers.

If Easter came on a fixed date, say for instance April 15, I don't know that we should be much ahead, for the uncertainty of the weather would still exist.

State of Stock.

From what I hear, lilies would be more plentiful if Easter were a week later. The scarcity in our town is not attributed to lateness so much as poor stock. The disease seems to have spread to Japan, or else the bulbs are procured from many different latitudes of this elongated archipelago. Don't move a lily from a warm house to one 20 degrees cooler unless the buds are white and ready to burst open. After that they will expand in almost any temperature.

Of late we have had many days of bright sunshine, which has upset our calculations, especially in bulbous stock. Shading, keeping off the direct rays of the sun, will help greatly to retard.

Rhododendrons show little sign of opening their buds, but when they do start the plant is shortly in full bloom. The great majority of azaleas will be sure to be early enough. If that best of all varieties, Mme. Van der Cruyssen, is too early, it will keep to put them under a high bench and cover with tissue paper. Some years ago we tried the basement of our "shack"; it did not work; the blooms lost their color.

Need for Space.

We are all crowded just now, and you must maneuver. Think what is most valuable to you, and some things not so important must take a back seat. It would be cruel and unwise to place a hybrid perpetual rose at the side of a path, but it will not hurt a spiraea to treat it so.

Speaking of the roses, don't expect all

Raffia Hamper and Roses.

Twig Basket of Hyacinths and Asparagus.

the buds to be out at once. It is not the way of a rose, and your customer will be far better pleased if two flowers are about expanded and three or four buds to come. There is a growing preference among our people for a plant with some buds yet to come. They enjoy seeing the future developments. This is so, particularly with the azalea.

The Marguerite Queen Alexandra is a fine thing. We have evidence already that it is going to sell well. Give it the fullest light and the buds open quickly.

Be Prepared.

In past years I have taken the liberty of advising you to be prepared for the Easter rush, for it is sure to come no matter what the weather is. I don't propose to go into detail now, because any hints I could give would be an old story. Be in a perfect state of preparedness and put nothing off to Friday that can be done on Thursday. Provide yourself with plenty of proficient help. Other trades take on a lot of extra help at certain times, and if it is not as proficient as your steady help, no harm will come of it, for your customers, seeing the place full and a rush of business going on, will not expect the time and suavity as in ordinary days. If an aristocrat is not pleased with that, you are as well without him.

The trimming or decoration of all plants sent out nowadays has grown to be a great feature of the business. The bill for paper and boxes for cut flowers is now as great as our coal bills used to be, but you cannot escape it. You must keep to the front in this as well as other features. The most insignificant plant now never is sent out or handed to a customer unless its pot is enveloped with a white and green paper tied with silver cord or baby ribbon. As the article rises in value the decoration becomes more elaborate and costly, and if you do what you ought, you can always charge sufficient to more than cover the cost of the embellishment. Many a plant of humble appearance or imperfect form is sold through a judicious trimming up.

The Retailer's Troubles.

The retailer, who has only the limited area of a city store, is terribly congested at Easter, and the man who has a commodious conservatory at his back, or the office connected with a range of glass, can work to much greater advantage, for the latter need not have all his plants on dress parade. He can have samples of all in their best togs and keep replenishing as fast as sold.

Division of labor is a great thing. It does not take a great schooling to teach a young man to trim up a plant tastefully, and the most handy at that may be very dumb as a salesman. Good salesmen should not be expected to do work that much cheaper help can perform quite as well.

One of the most anxious and vexatious things connected with these busy times is the delivery. Ninety per cent of all our sales have to be delivered; therefore not the least valuable man on the place is one who knows the city well and will not keep the wagon or automobile waiting empty at the door for a load. Don't let him run away to sell Mr. Impatient a 25-cent hyacinth. His services are too valuable. Deliver when you promise. If you promise Saturday, it is no business of yours to think Sunday a. m. will do as well. It may be a goody person who believes in keeping holy the Sabbath day and does not want to work his own or your man servant, or maid servant, or his ox.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

THE GLADIOLUS.

A Summer Cut Flower.

The place the gladiolus occupies in commercial floriculture is unique inasmuch as it is easily and cheaply grown and comes at a season when all lines of the florist's business are dull and consequently, must sell at a moderate price. Still it is one of the most useful and lasting, most beautiful and easily handled, of any of the long list of flowers that come during the months of August and September.

Gladioli are not partial to quality or kind of soil, so long as it is full of well-decomposed vegetable matter, and fine and mellow. Where a preference can be given, a rich, sandy loam is best suited to its needs. They require full sunlight and must have plenty of moisture at all times; particularly is this true from the time the bud first begins to swell the stalk until full bloom. If a sheltered location from strong winds can be given, it is quite a help many times, as nothing will so use up a flower spike as a hot, dry wind in August. It also must necessarily affect the young spike just coming into bloom.

A medium size corm, one about one and one-fourth inches in diameter, that has not bloomed, is the most likely to produce the finest spike, all conditions considered. Some of the finest spikes I ever grew came from corms not over three-fourths of an inch in diameter. Corms planted very early take a longer period to come into bloom than those planted later. If the first month after planting be cold and wet, plantings made the middle of April will not bloom earlier than those planted the middle of May. After May 15 a planting of corms every two weeks up to July 1 will usually secure a succession of blooms until October 1. Some varieties bloom much earlier than others. The difference in blooming between Shakespeare and May over "1900" is about two weeks.

The gladiolus should, for convenience in cultivating and cutting the blooms, be planted in furrows or drills about three feet apart and from two to three inches apart in the rows. Large corms may be planted four inches deep, and smaller sizes less. An inch less in heavy soil will be about right. The cultivation should be most thorough and not very deep after the plants have attained six inches in height, as by that time the roots will be occupying the ground and should be disturbed as little as possible.

Varieties and Cultivation.

The varieties most sought for in the flower markets are the light and soft shades and the brilliant and rich colors. All colors can be toned down some by cutting when the first flowers begin to open and allowing them to develop in a place free from the direct light of the sun. Many varieties attain a most delicate coloring when opened in this way and when a nearly white variety is allowed to bloom entirely in the sun it takes on more color. Light varieties vary some. This is quite noticeable in the May. A light strain of it is very beautiful, but an equally true May growing beside it may contain so much color that to a novice it would be declared a distinct variety.

The best stage of growth to cut a spike for express shipment is when the first flower is opening. The best time of day is early in the morning, placing the cut in water in a place free from draft and direct sunlight. If the flowers are to be used near-by and the delivery is made by wagon, it is quite satisfactory to allow the spike to develop three or four flowers before cutting.

Tying the spikes in bunches of twenty-five is desirable where they are to be handled by the commission houses. These bunches should be packed in crates sufficiently high to allow them to stand upright and of a size to hold the bunches compactly, preventing chocking about.

Valuable information as to the proper handling of the cut stock can be obtained by visiting any of the wholesale houses during the season and witnessing the condition of stock as it arrives from the different growers and seeing how the wholesalers and retailers handle it.

that attention to this detail is religiously observed. Watch for any spots in the soil that dry out before a general watering is needed; touch these up in advance, endeavoring thereby to remedy any tendency to unevenness of moisture in the bench.

The soil next to the side of bench will particularly bear close watching. There is nothing so beneficial to the carnation as a constantly changing atmosphere, but this can be easily overdone during windy spells, causing too rapid transpiration, resulting in the plants flagging.

Opinions differ on the question of supplying additional plant food to those varieties which have given good returns thus far in the season, but certain it is that the soil must be somewhat depleted. If we are to maintain good quality bloom, the question would seem to be simply what and how to apply; a matter to be taken up in my next.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Preparation for Easter.

Ten days after these notes come off the press will be that biggest of all business days for the florist, and preparations are already being made all over the country to meet the greatest rush of the season. If indications count for anything, the biggest sales on record are expected this Easter. With any kind of weather there ought to be an abundance of stock in all lines, and the main question will be about the ability of the craft to handle the business offered.

The past month has not seen any warm, bright spell of weather, such as is usually experienced in March. This has upset the calculations of the grower of cut flowers in his endeavor to have a big crop for Easter. As I said before, with an average amount of bright weather during the next ten days there should be a big cut of blooms. We hear of some of the smaller growers, whose crops of carnations are just past the heaviest mark, but those who grow a larger variety and quantity all will have a good cut. It is well that the cut of blooms is naturally heavier at this time of the year than it is at Christmas, because not only is the demand greater, but the blooms cannot be stored up so long. If the weather remains cool as it has been during the past few weeks, you will have no trouble in holding up your blooms a week or more; but if it turns warm, they will not keep in good condition that long.

In my last week's notes I advised cutting the blooms close every day, and it is needless for me to repeat that it is quite as necessary during this time. In fact, you will be able to save up a much larger cut in that way, because by keeping the earlier cut ones a few degrees cooler they will develop slower, and those cut the latter part of the week, if kept at about 55 degrees, will develop more rapidly and all will be in fine shape.

I want to caution you to offer only such stock as is in first-class condition. By this I do not mean that it should all grade as fancy. There is always a certain percentage of inferior stock among the cut and these must be marketed. However, if this grade of blooms is fresh and will stand handling, it will in many cases prove more satisfactory than blooms that graded as fancy when cut but have been kept so long that every little knock leaves a bruise which, in

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Seasonable Notes.

This is the time of year when many duties present themselves for consideration by the carnation grower. The sun's increased power already begins to show its effect on the more delicate shades of color, especially in the large glass and light bar house of today. Buds develop much faster than during the dark days of winter, the surplus side ones being no exception. The plants, being possessed of more extended root system, require more water and March winds necessitate close attention to the matter of ventilation; varieties which have bloomed heavily all winter must needs have drawn correspondingly on the food supply of the soil.

The regular work of harvesting, packing, marketing, attention to young stock, late propagation, etc., added to the above, keep one busy if things are to run smoothly.

Shading serves the double purpose of lowering the temperature and protection against fading of color in the blooms. Although to a certain extent unnatural, it must be resorted to if we are to temper the likewise unnatural conditions produced under glass during a portion of the year. Cheese-cloth suspended well up over the plants and arranged so as to be easily removed during stormy or cloudy periods, also, in such manner that the sun's rays are obstructed for three or four midday hours only, will serve as a good beginning. This manner of shading prevents bleaching of color, affecting temperature but little.

Later in the season a light shading on the inner surface of the glass with a mixture of whiting and water, or on the outer surface with white lead and naphtha, or gasoline, will be necessary. Either of these mixtures should be about the consistency of milk when applied, preferably with a wide brush. White lead as commonly sold (ground in oil) is inclined to give the mixture too much body, as will be found when it is desired to remove it, which objection can be overcome by using the dry lead in powdered form; mix with the naphtha, adding a suspicion of linseed oil to facilitate blending and stir briskly. Why this works as it does I do not pretend to know, but I discovered accidentally that much labor can be saved.

The secret of success in shading is to proceed gradually, keeping pace with the weather, not the season. Disbudding, if neglected for a time, not only lowers the quality of bloom and unnecessarily taxes the plants, but the work of getting back to normal conditions is discouraging to the operator in proportion to the time neglected; see to it the ordinary amount of handling, will ruin the bloom. It is this latter class of stock that has made the holiday cut flower trade suffer more than any other. Selling that grade of stock is like selling gold bricks. The public soon becomes aware of the fact that the stock is not fresh, and rather than run the same risk next time, they will look for something else, and if it is a flower they want, it will likely be a plant, because they know that it is fresh. If the dealer offers his customers blooms that are of inferior quality, they can see what they are buying, and if they improve in water, which they will do if they are fresh, it will please them greatly. It will give the dealer lots of satisfaction, too (to say nothing of increased trade), to have his customers return and tell how well the flowers kept and how large they grew a few days after they were received.

It will not harm the plants as much to raise the night temperature a few degrees at this time of the year as it does at Christmas, because there is more sunshine and you can give them more air. Growth is stronger, too, now and the evils of an excessive night temperature are more easily overcome during the days. However, keep within reason and go about it gradually, else you will split many calyxes.

A. F. J. BAUR.

PLANTS NEED FEEDING.

Our carnations are healthy and luxuriant, but the bloom is pretty small. Is there any way of increasing the size of the flower? They were benched too late, as we know, about November 10. Until that time they had grown outside. We are now getting about the first crop of flowers. They budded very freely—perhaps carry too many. Since January 1 we have used a little manure water and have twice treated them to nitrate of soda, as our soils, to some extent, lack nitrates.

E. & B.

I would advise you to give your carnation plants a weekly application of liquid manure. If you are prepared to do so, that will improve the bloom considerably. Use about a bushel of tolerably new cow manure to 100 gallons of water and to every second application add to the solution a half pound of nitrate of soda. If you are not prepared to do this, I would advise you to give one application of a diluted solution of nitrate of soda—one pound in 100 gallons of water. Then about a week later sprinkle on the soil a good coat of bone flour or dried blood, and immediately put on a mulch of half-rotten cow manure about an inch thick. When this is put on give a good watering and after that water when needed. The plan first suggested would perhaps give the quickest results, but the latter plan, no doubt, would prove just as good and would last much longer in its effect. The best time to have done this feeding would have been just before the buds began to show. Remember that in the future.

SNAILS IN CARNATIONS.

Snails are making ravages in my carnation benches, and I would like to know the best method to exterminate them. The benches are all away from the wall. The snails are the worst in the center bench. I am using salt for a dead line. Please tell us the best way to use it.

R. A. M.

The snails you complain of are one of the most troublesome pests in the whole business when they once get a foothold, and one of the hardest to get rid of. Salt and lime both have more or less merit in checking them, but it is hard to reach them with those two articles. Either hand picking or poisoning are the most effective methods. Sugar and Paris green should be quite effective. Lay it around the same as you do for sow-bugs. Sliced potatoes soaked in arsenic water are also recommended. Dusting the plants with hellebore or slug shot will be found another very effective method. If you employ a night man, have him look over the plants between midnight and morning, and he will find many snails which he can destroy. They are very sluggish and slow of movement, and with a strong light he will have no trouble in finding them. Strong salt water will destroy them if you can reach them with it.

A. F. J. BAUR.

FOR EXHIBITION.

While there is yet lots of time for propagating chrysanthemums for cut flower work generally, and average commercial culture, it is quite time for the grower intending to exhibit to be getting his stock into shape.

Get in what cuttings you need at once if you have not yet propagated all you need, and just as soon as the cuttings have roots on them half an inch long get them out into soil so that the future plant will not be handicapped at the start by being weakened in the cutting bench.

Doing things on time and when they need doing applies to growing mums perhaps with more force than in growing any other plant. Leaving the cuttings in the sand a week after they should have been potted means that the plants will make a very weak, spindly growth, from which they will not recover for a long time. Get them out just as soon as you can into the light and air, for the cooler and harder you can grow the young plants the better they will be.

In potting up young stock from the cutting bench use no bone or artificial fertilizer whatever in the soil, as it will only do more harm than good by souring the soil. Get nice fresh loam, and if you can add to it a third of rotted leaf, you would have an ideal compost for a first potting. If leaf-mold cannot be procured, some decayed cow manure is perhaps the next best thing, as it will help to lighten the soil.

Loam alone, without the addition of any other matter, is crude, and while the young roots will run in it, they will not run nearly so quickly, nor will the plants ever have such a look of perfect health, as they will from the use of a little leaf soil.

We are apt to laugh sometimes at the old country ideas of compost and secret formulas for growing different kinds of plants, and while much of it was undoubtedly foolish and unnecessary, the underlying principle of assisting a young and delicate plant along by a careful preparation of the soil will always hold good in practice.

Ventilation.

We must remember in handling the young plants that we are dealing with a plant that is almost hardy, and that air, and an abundance of it, is very necessary as soon as the plants are sufficiently established. Many modern establishments have a house with side and top air, where young chrysanthemums and carnations can be kept down to any temperature desired.

If you have not got such a house, a cold frame is almost as good. A cold frame is really the very best place after April 1 for young stock of this description, because there the plants are right away from fire heat, and on bright, warm days the sash can be taken off entirely and the plants will show in a week, by the rich dark color of the leaves, how they appreciate their conditions.

I like to have plants in good shape for planting on the benches by the second week in May, which is now a matter of some five week's time. If some of the plants were propagated in February and are now running up and the pots are full of roots it will be far better to pot on into 4-inch or even 6-inch pots than to permit the plants to get stunted before planting time. If plants are boxed up instead of being potted they draw up very quickly and it generally pays to pot each plant before planting time.

Dwarf varieties, of which we have today a considerable number, such as Merza, Mrs. W. Duckham, Nellie Pockett, Merstham Red, J. H. Doyle, Cheltoni and Lady Hopetown, should not be topped any more. They will not grow over four feet high anyway, but there are some tall plants that may be kept pinched back till May 1, and by this means can be held down to a reasonable height. Cases in point are General Hutton, the Eatons, Ben Wells, S. T. Wright, the Carnots and Mrs. D. V. West.

The careful exhibitor has a record of heights of his varieties and knows where he is at, and a reliable disseminator of new kinds always gives, so far as he can, the average height and general characteristics of a variety, so that a little study of the yearly lists is time well spent.

Novelties.

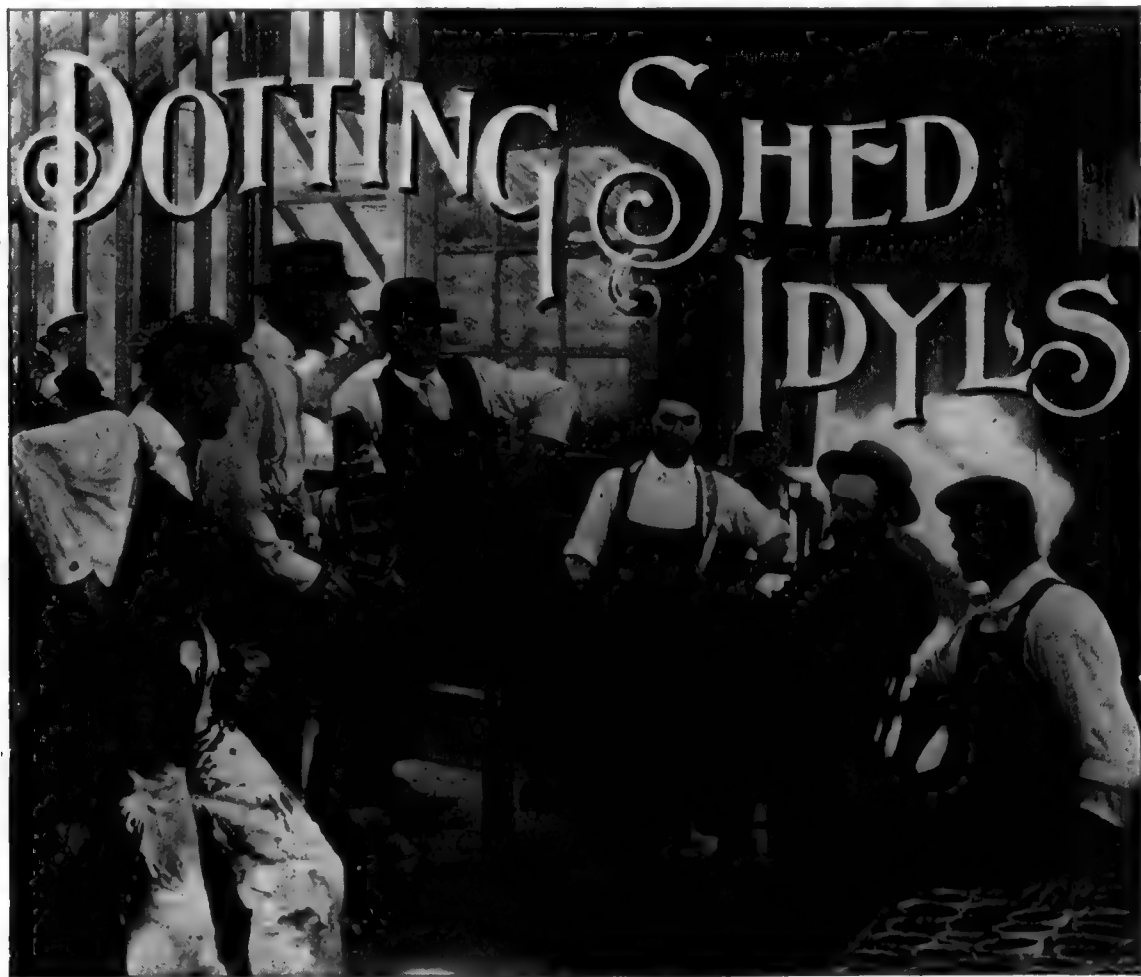

When plants of the new kinds are received nine growers out of ten take off the top to increase the stock as much as possible. This is all right when the plants are strong enough to stand it, but it is a serious mistake to go to excess in this and then blame the introducer for sending out a worthless variety. As a matter of fact the blame lies with the buyer, who has killed the natural vigor of the plant by propagating it to death. This happened in one case to my knowledge last year with Mrs. William Duckham, and in such cases the blame should be placed where it belongs.

Flies on Plants.

At this season, when plants are seen to have flies on them, one is apt to leave them, as they are not numerous enough to demand fumigating, yet more than there should be for the health of the plant. Dust them over with the tobacco prepared expressly for this purpose, which is the very best thing to use. It takes little time and is very effective. A stitch in time saves nine.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

THE PRODIGAL RETURNS.

It could not be said that the boss "fired" Jaggs—he permitted him merely to sift out of the adjacent landscape.

It may be that the moral tone of the establishment was distinctly improved by his absence—it is true the night fireman showed a tendency to lessen the monotony of his evenings by going to revivals when he was supposed to be on duty—but there is no question that Jaggs's departure cast gloom over the Lonesomehurst greenhouses.

Time passed slowly on; the horticultural graduate had retired to an agricultural college and Davie had taken a solemn farewell to the entire establishment and started on his threatened visit to Greenock. Even Tommy had grown restive and talked morosely of retiring across the Atlantic to the paternal chandler's shop in Camberwell.

The place was short-handed, one of the boilers persisted in suffering from general debility every cold night, and the boss acquired such a constitutional "grouch" that the greenhouse cat took to dodging under a bench at the sound of his distant footstep.

"Talk about cheerfulness," groaned Tommy, turning his tobacco box upside down to extract the last grain of consolation therein, "I believe a second 'and morgue would be joyouser than this 'ere bloomin' old sepulchre. What does a chap break into the florist business for, anyway?"

The propagator modestly admitted that the habit of eating three meals a day was responsible for his entry into the trade, but Tommy continued to mutter savagely while he stripped some loose scraps from a bundle of tobacco stems, to eke out the dottle smouldering in his old briar pipe.

The wind howled around the potting shed, blowing aside the burlap portieres arranged to cover the cracks around the windows. Suddenly Cinders, the unregenerate terrier attached to the greenhouse force, deserted his special corner of the ashpit, and rushed wildly to the door.

"If I didn't know as Davie was gone," remarked Tommy doubtfully, "and Jaggs—"

The door opened with a jerk and the terrier began to jump with yelps of joy at two snow-sprinkled figures.

"Well, of all the—Davie, you old ruffian, 'ave you been gettin' Jaggs out o' jail?"

"Ellis Island," remarked Jaggs, unabashed. "Wanted to keep me out o' the bloomin' country, along of a lot o' Dagoes and Skowagians, when I've been over here long enough to vote four times at one election."

"'Twas a lad on the Anchoria," explained Davie, "tell't me there's a lad I know that's in a fair way to be sent back, so I just got him awa'."

"And what's the matter with your goin' back yourself?" asked the propagator.

"Well," remarked Davie, philosophically, "Greenock'll keep a wheen longer."

With that Davie began to draw a suit of frayed overalls over his decent Sunday blacks, and passing around a plump tobacco pouch, settled down in his old corner. Jaggs looked affectionately at the dusty rafters, whence the young owl Tommy was educating looked down suspiciously.

"Well," said he, "there ain't no place like 'ome after all. Many's the time I've thought o' this 'ere pottin' shed, while I was dodgin' wolves and snow leopards, and savages, over there t'other side of the Himalayas."

"Them Himalayas down around Snake Hill?" asked Tommy, pleasantly.

"Many's the time I've said to myself," continued Jaggs, affectionately shying a lump of coal at Tommy, "when I was tryin' to hold on to my hair while I was slidin' down a precipice 14,000 feet high, 'well, it's Jersey for mine if I ever get out o' this!' Leaky boilers and busted hose ain't near as mussy as fallin' into extinct volcanoes, and say, I'll bet even money that all the plagues of Egypt drifted out to Tibet, includin' the chilblains."

"But how did you get to Tibet?" asked the new fireman.

"Walked, o' course," responded Tommy. "Drive ahead, Jaggs, old boy, and tell us all about it."

"It were this way, ye see," explained Jaggs; "when they was sendin' that chap out from London to hunt up new plants in the Forbidden Land, as them Chinks call it, I just naturally went along. I reckon I've told you about takin' a little jaunt up there once before, huntin' rhododendrons; there's a blue rhododendron up there that ain't never been brought to Europe yet—don't suppose it ever will, unless I take a notion to go and get it. That's where I learned to talk their lingo that sounds like choppin' hash in a wooden bowl. A scientific gent as I met in Kashmir once tells me as I speaks them foreign dialects pretty near as grammatical as I speaks my own; we'd have been in a tight place now and then if it wasn't for that."

"Course, most o' the chaps that goes to Tibet makes for Lassa and they ain't runnin' any Cook's tours around them diggin's yet, either, but we made for the open country where we'd heard about some kind o' tree sunflower with flowers two feet across. O' course, them natives is such horrid liars as you can't believe the half o' what they tells you. Dirty, too; some o' them looked like they hadn't been washed for 400 years."

"We 'adn't gone far before Johnson and me decided that while we didn't want to cause any 'ard feelin's, we just 'ad to wash the cook. So I made some o' the bearers undress him and start to scrub him with a birch besom. And, d'ye know, after they'd been scrubbin' away for fifteen minutes they come down to another suit o' clothes!"

"Johnson seemed to have a notion it wasn't lucky to wash that cook, and maybe he was right, for blessed if that there artist didn't light out that night, after tryin' to vaccinate me with a Bowie knife. Still, as I says to Johnson, he'd have killed us with his cookin' anyway, if he'd stayed."

"As things turned out, we didn't 'ave anythink to cook most o' the time, as we spent a month or two playin' tag over the mountains with a lot o' whiskery gentlemen that looked like Shems and Japhets out o' some toy Noah's ark."

They seemed to have some nasty idea about carvin' us up into individual portions, if they could ever lay their claws on us, and we didn't like it.

"The hotel accommodations was miserable, too; sometimes there was a rock to crawl under, and sometimes there wasn't, and I must say that after eatin' dry flour and tea for a week or two we both got pretty tired o' the bill o' fare.

"I must say, too, that Johnson began to complain of his chilblains most outrageous; he says if you give him his choice between chilblains and bubonic plague he'll take the plague every time. I told him, soothin' like, that the plague 'd be fatal, and he says that's why he prefers it to chilblains. He seemed bloomin' vexed, too, along of a snow leopard that kep' hangin' around tryin' to rush us when we wasn't lookin'. He says those chaps in London seemed to expect two much for two pound ten a week."

"Well," remarked the propagator, solemnly, "it seems to me he was entitled to make a kick. But wasn't there nothing but rocks and savages?"

"There was," returned Jaggs, with feeling, "there was mountains and ragin' torrents, and extinct volcanoes, and a whole mess o' wolves that give us a circus performance every night. When the leopard wasn't on duty the wolves was. I s'pose they thought a brace of nice, juicy plant collectors was a real treat.

"Johnson said arter all he felt sorry for them poor wolves; we wasn't neither of us in prime condition, and two chaps like us wouldn't go far in that bunch, even if they made a fair divvy. I didn't like his way of lookin' at it, but then the poor fellow seemed low in his mind. He kept talkin' about all the plant collectors he'd known that was drowned in shipwrecks, and eat by crockydiles, and bit by cobras, and done up by cholery and cannibals; you'd have thought me and him was the only chaps left in the business, and he didn't seem to think we was extra salubrious. When it came to shakin' hands with calamity, Johnson was all to the mustard.

"Well, as I was sayin', we kept circlin' around over the rocks and snow, never knowin' whether we'd bring out at Omaha or the North Pole; we'd lost count of dates and about all we thought of was takin' plenty of exercise and keepin' a few laps ahead of the native population. Johnson reckoned that if it kept up much longer he'd be ready to sympathize with one o' them Standard Oil chaps dodgin' a subpoena server.

"One day we was restin' a bit on the side of one o' them mountains; nothink but snow and rocks and more mountains, as far as we could see. There was a precipice in front and how we was goin' to climb down we didn't know. We was standin' on the snow, just lookin' around, when I hears a stone rattle down, and there above us was six of them savages with their carvin' knives ready, tryin' to sneak up behind us! And what struck me as bein' quite a joke on them natives, there was a pack o' wolves, thirty or forty, sneakin' up behind, tryin' to corner them!"

Jaggs stopped to fill his pipe, after demanding a broom straw to improve its drawing qualities.

"But you couldn't get away down the precipice," said the fireman anxiously.

"That's precisely what Johnson says to me," continued Jaggs. "We made a rush forward, and the next thing we know that there snow field was slidin' down hill like shootin' the chutes. I see a big ravine with a ragin' torrent at the bottom, but we took it like a bird, and after that I didn't know nothink for a while. The next thing I know I hear Johnson askin' if any gent 'ad come across his collar button, and a big red-headed Scotchman pulls me out of a mess o' snow and tells me I was trespassin' on private property. Say, I reckon me and Johnson busted all the speed limits for sure on that trip."

"And where were ye?" asked Davie, sympathetically.

"Oh, somewhere in the suburbs o' China," responded Jaggs, carelessly. "That wasn't nothink to what come afterwards, gettin' down to the coast. Why—"

The door opened and the boss looked in, remarking cheerfully: "It's about time you chaps turned in," and the deserted potting shed was soon left to the lonesome night man and the sympathetic terrier.

PHILADELPHIA SPRING SHOW.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's spring show was held in its home, Broad street, near Locust, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of last week. The array of blooming plants was a feature. The specimen azaleas, bougainvilleas and spiraeas showed admirable culture. A handsome specimen genista was declared the finest plant on exhibition. The beds of hyacinths in variety, grown in pots and set in moss, competing for the special prize, were very effective. There were some well grown calla lilies with a profusion of bloom, many well grown Easter lilies, evidently from selected bulbs, and all varieties of bulbous stock. Geraniums were shown in quantity, and, from out of town, a choice collection of orchids and a few new carnations.

The following were the principal prize winners: John Hobson, gardener to Edward A. Schmidt, Radnor; William Robertson, gardener to John W. Pepper, Jenkintown; Samuel Batchelor, gardener to C. B. Newbold, Jenkintown; Joseph Hurley, gardener to James W. Paul, Jr., Radnor; John McCleary, gardener to Mrs. R. J. C. Walker, Germantown, Philadelphia; John Hedland, gardener to Mrs. W. L. Elkins, Elkins Park; Fred Huggler, gardener to George Vaux, Bryn Mawr; Thomas J. Holland, gardener to H. B. Rosengarten, Malvern; William Kleinheinz, gardener to P. A. B. Widener, Ogontz; Daniel Neely, gardener to Craige Lippincott, Meadowbrook; A. G. Williams, gardener to Samuel T. Bodine, Villa Nova; John H. Dodds, gardener to H. S. Hopper, Narberth; Arthur Mallon, Jr., gardener to Edgar T. Scott, Lansdowne; F. W. Barclay, gardener to C. A. Griscom, Haverford; James Coleman, gardener to W. Lippincott, Bryn Mawr; Thomas Gaynor, gardener to Mrs. John B. Stetson, Ashbourne.

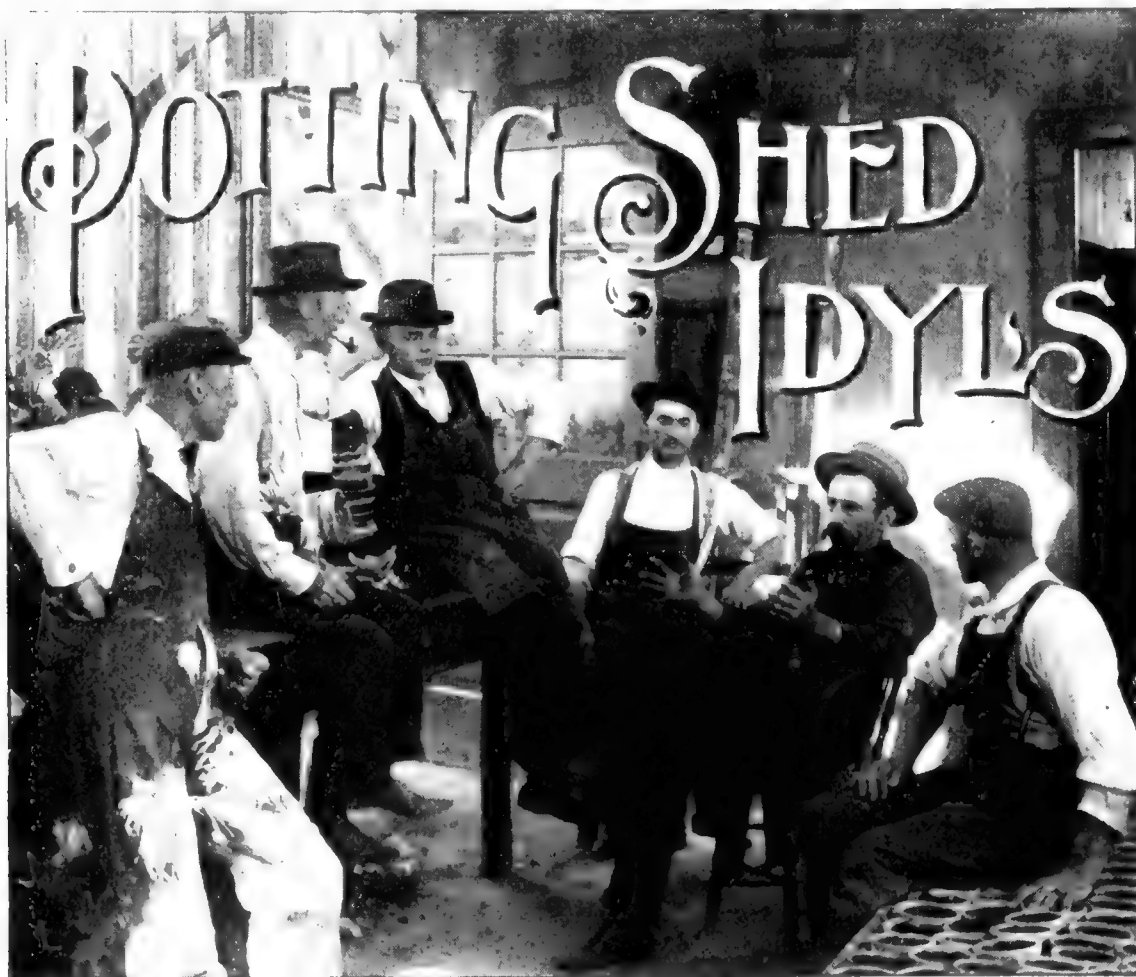

A certificate of merit was awarded to H. R. Carlton, Willoughby, O., for new violet, Governor Herrick. This is a large single violet and has proved in this exhibition to be a good keeper. A assailant. This is all right when the plants are strong enough to stand it, but it is a serious mistake to go to excess in this and then blame the introducer for sending out a worthless variety. As a matter of fact the blame lies with the buyer, who has killed the natural vigor of the plant by propagating it to death. This happened in one case to my knowledge last year with Mrs. William Duckham, and in such cases the blame should be placed where it belongs.

Flies on Plants.

At this season, when plants are seen to have flies on them, one is apt to leave them, as they are not numerous enough to demand fumigating, yet more than there should be for the health of the plant. Dust them over with the tobacco prepared expressly for this purpose, which is the very best thing to use. It takes little time and is very effective. A stitch in time saves nine.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

THE PRODIGAL RETURNS.

It could not be said that the boss "fired" Jaggs—he permitted him merely to sift out of the adjacent landscape.

It may be that the moral tone of the establishment was distinctly improved by his absence—it is true the night fireman showed a tendency to lessen the monotony of his evenings by going to revivals when he was supposed to be on duty—but there is no question that Jaggs's departure cast gloom over the Lonesome Hurst greenhouses.

Time passed slowly on; the horticultural graduate had retired to an agricultural college and Davie had taken a solemn farewell to the entire establishment and started on his threatened visit to Greenock. Even Tommy had grown restive and talked morosely of retiring across the Atlantic to the paternal chandler's shop in Camberwell.

The place was short-handed, one of the boilers persisted in suffering from general debility every cold night, and the boss required such a constitutional "grouch" that the greenhouse cat took to dodging under a bench at the sound of his distant footstep.

"Talk about cheerfulness," groaned Tommy, turning his tobacco box upside down to extract the last grain of consolation therein. "I believe a second land mortgage would be joyouser than this 'ere bloomin' old sepulchre. What does a chap break into the florist business for, anyway?"

The propagator modestly admitted that his habit of eating three meals a day was responsible for his entry into the trade, but Tommy continued to mutter savagely while he stripped some loose scraps from a bundle of tobacco stems, to eke out the dottle smouldering in his old briar pipe.

The wind howled around the potting shed, blowing aside the burlap portieres arranged to cover the cracks around the windows. Suddenly Cinders, the unregenerate terrier attached to the greenhouse force, deserted his special corner of the ashpit, and rushed wildly to the door.

"If I didn't know as Davie was gone," remarked Tommy doubtfully, "and Jaggs—"

The door opened with a jerk and the terrier began to jump with yelps of joy at two snow-sprinkled figures.

"Well, of all the—Davie, you old ruffian, 'ave you been gettin' Jaggs out o' jail?"

"Ellis Island," remarked Jaggs, unabashed. "Wanted to keep me out o' the bloomin' country, along of a lot o' Dagoes and Skowagians, when I've been over here long enough to vote four times at one election."

"'Twas a lad on the Anchoria," explained Davie, "tell't me there's a lad I know that's in a fair way to be sent back, so I just got him awa'."

"And what's the matter with your goin' back yourself?" asked the propagator.

"Well," remarked Davie, philosophically, "Greenock'll keep a wheen longer."

With that Davie began to draw a suit of frayed overalls over his decent Sunday blacks, and passing around a plump tobacco pouch, settled down in his old corner. Jaggs looked affectionately at the dusty rafters, whence the young owl Tommy was educating looked down suspiciously.

"Well," said he, "there ain't no place like 'ome after all. Many's the time I've thought o' this 'ere pottin' shed, while I was dodgin' wolves and snow leopards, and savages, over there t'other side of the Himalayas."

"Them Himalayas down around Snake Hill?" asked Tommy, pleasantly.

"Many's the time I've said to myself," continued Jaggs, affectionately shying a lump of coal at Tommy, "when I was tryin' to hold on to my hair while I was slidin' down a precipice 14,000 feet high, 'well, it's Jersey for mine if I ever get out o' this!' Leaky boilers and busted hose ain't near as mussy as fallin' into extinct volcanoes, and say, I'll bet even money that all the plagues of Egypt drifted out to Tibet, includin' the chilblains."

"But how did you get to Tibet?" asked the new fireman.

"Walked, o' course," responded Tommy. "Drive ahead, Jaggs, old boy, and tell us all about it."

FUMIGATING.

Hydrocyanic Acid Gas.

We have been having much trouble in fumigating with the nicotine preparations. In a large house we find that our men cannot paint the preparations on the hot steam pipes going entirely around the house, as is necessary, before the air becomes charged with the fumes and several of them have suffered severely. As a result we have been experimenting with hydrocyanic acid gas. We find that it works excellently in fighting thrips in rose houses, although we have used it in no very exact proportions. The first time we tried it we used flower pots with the drainage hole plugged with a cork and covered with a little cement. I stood in the door of the greenhouse and noted that the moment the acid ate through the tissue paper wrapped around the cyanide the liquid boiled violently and overflowed the pot. How large a receptacle should be used and is there a loss if the liquid boils over? I have since been told that I was exceedingly careless standing in the greenhouse door and watching the operation. How quickly is the gas generated and how rapidly does it spread? Is it heavier or lighter than the atmosphere? In other words, would a man who felt himself being overcome with the gas save himself by dropping to the floor? R. G.

Our experience has shown that hydrocyanic acid gas is not a good insecticide for rose houses. It does not kill thrips readily and is very injurious to the young growth on roses.

The gas, while only a little lighter than air, spreads quite rapidly through a greenhouse. A house 100 feet long and twelve feet wide, walls three feet, seven feet to the ridge, with three jars would be filled with gas in about two minutes. Such a house would require, say for violets, about two pounds of ninety-eight per cent cyanide of potash. This would be divided into three parts, each portion put in a 2-pound light manila paper sack. Starting at one end, these sacks can be placed in the jars containing the sulphuric acid and water, and the length of time required for the acid to eat through the paper would give the operator sufficient time to get to the others and out of the house safely. The acid will eat through cork, so that the flower-pot with the drainage hole plugged with cork would not be a good vessel to liberate the gas.

The correspondent can obtain full information regarding the use of hydrocyanic acid by writing the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and requesting Circular No. 37 (revised edition) of the Division of Entomology.

Nicotine Preparations.

For thrips in rose houses fairly good results can be obtained by vaporizing the stronger nicotine preparations, either over single-burner oil-stoves or by dropping into the solution pieces of hot iron. A good-sized hot flat-iron, for example, will vaporize about a pint of nicotine extract. For a rose house 100 feet long, eighteen feet wide and ten feet high to the ridge, a pint and a half to two pints of a good nicotine tract vaporized at intervals of a few days will usually destroy thrips.

If the stronger extracts are to be painted on the pipes, the work should be done when the pipes are cool. If steam is used in heating the houses the pipes could be allowed to cool down sufficiently in the middle of the day on a warm day, so that the work could be done without so much discomfort to the men.

A good way, where the stronger extracts are used, is to have a number of vaporizing tanks fitted over the steam pipes or rather attached to the pipes so that the pipes will run through them, having from three to five of these vaporizing troughs in a house 100 feet long and eighteen feet wide. The nicotine solution can then be poured into the vaporizing troughs, and the hot pipes will throw it into the atmosphere.

Various other methods of vaporizing are used, but these suggestions will probably be sufficient. A. F. WOODS.

WITH THE GROWERS.

Budlong, Sons & Co., Providence.

One of the largest establishments in the east is that of J. A. Budlong, Sons & Co., at Auburn, near Providence, R. I. Until a little over three years ago the firm was noted as one of the biggest producers of vegetables for the market, pickling varieties being their specialty. These they still grow on an immense scale, having some 1,500 acres under cultivation, but whereas a few years ago several miles of sashes were devoted to lettuce culture, this branch has been reduced somewhat and all greenhouses are given up to cut flower production with the exception of one large structure from which a crop of rhubarb is taken to be followed by flowers in early spring. Between the vegetable farms, pickle and vinegar factories and greenhouses an army of 600 to 700 men and women are on the pay rolls at the height of the busy season.

Although so short a time has elapsed since the firm launched into the cut flower business, they have built up one of the finest plants in the country. Several of the long, rather low lettuce houses are given up to carnation culture, the roses occupying the newer ones, these latter being of the most up-to-date types. The largest house, 60x700, is one of the finest in the country. It contains nearly 19,000 Brides and Bridesmaids. One house is 40x700 and two others 22x700. There are two 40x450, one 40x412 and several of smaller size. In regard to varieties, Brides and Maids to the number of 50,000 are planted, the latter having a slight preponderance, 7,500 Killarney, 5,000 Chatenay, 6,000 Liberty, 3,000 Morgan and 3,000 Golden Gate are grown. The last named does well, but will not be grown again, owing to an uncertain call for it.

Richmond will be tried next year to the extent of 3,000 plants. Several thousand Kaiserin lifted from the benches, pruned back and potted up will be benched shortly for summer blooming. Wm. White, the manager of this establishment, is a graduate under Alexander Montgomery at Waban Conservatories. He has certainly done wonders during his short stay here, for stock in all the houses is in excellent condition. There are few commercial places kept so neatly and to those who imagine that second rate goods are raised here a visit will be an eye opener. A house containing 20,000 grafted stock for this season's planting contained as perfect a lot as anyone could wish to see.

Carnations fill quite a number of houses, two 30x500 and several of smaller size. Only a few sorts are grown and these in quantity. Lawson is a prime favorite and succeeds finely. One house containing 13,000 plants was a fine sight. Enchantress is quite at home and carried grand stems, being in big demand. In whites, Boston Market is finer than we have ever seen it. A big house of it was a sheet of bloom, stems long and stiff. Some White Lawson is grown, but it falls far below Boston Market. A batch of rather odd deep-pink-striped Enchantress and one of Red Lawson, both originating here, complete the list of varieties grown. Young stock for next season looked first-class, a big house containing 65,000 boxed off plants being a perfect picture to look upon.

Heating is by steam, three 150 horsepower boilers being used. In addition the steam from two boilers of similar size used for a vinegar factory can be utilized at night. An additional 200 horsepower boiler can be harnessed if needed. In spite of the long distance some of the houses are from the boilers the heating is done very satisfactorily. The rose houses in the large block are connected by corridor through the center, making them very easy of access, one from another.

While some flowers are shipped to New York, the bulk are shipped to Boston, where three salesmen, Messrs. Malley, McAlpine and Glidden, at the Park street market, are kept busy. With the constant additions being made here, the Budlong plant will soon be the largest of its kind in the east. The general excellence in all departments speaks volumes for the skill of the worthy manager, who, like most of good growers, is very modest and unassuming.

GLASS ADVANCES.

At a meeting of glass manufacturers of the country, held March 29 at Pittsburgh, the price of glass was advanced seven and a half per cent. While, at the beginning of the year, the price of glass was low, the demand for greenhouse glass has been phenomenal and the indications now are that a still further advance will occur before the end of the season. As evidence of the unusual demand for greenhouse glass a Cleveland jobber reports the sale of 4,000 boxes of greenhouse glass in the single city of Ashtabula.

NOTES ON LETTUCE.

Greenfly.

I note Mr. Croydon's answer to W. E. B. on the best method of keeping greenfly from lettuce. Owing to the great danger in handling hydrocyanic acid gas, it would seem to me to be impracticable in many places; for instance, where the boiler room has connection with the greenhouses. For one, I would hesitate to use such deadly stuff to kill a little greenfly and I am sure there are many of the same opinion. To these I want to say: Use tobacco dust on your lettuce. Begin in the seed box and continue until within ten days of cutting. Dust it on by a quick motion of the hand, throwing it six feet above the plants, thus allowing it to settle

FUMIGATING.

Hydrocyanic Acid Gas.

We have been having much trouble in fumigating with the nicotine preparations. In a large house we find that our men cannot paint the preparations on the hot steam pipes going entirely around the house, as is necessary, before the air becomes charged with the fumes and several of them have suffered severely. As a result we have been experimenting with hydrocyanic acid gas. We find that it works excellently in fighting thrips in rose houses, although we have used it in no very exact proportions. The first time we tried it we used flower pots with the drainage hole plugged with a cork and covered with a little cement. I stood in the door of the greenhouse and noted that the moment the acid ate through the tissue paper wrapped around the cyanide the liquid boiled violently and overflowed the pot. How large a receptacle should be used and is there a loss if the liquid boils over? I have since been told that I was exceedingly careless standing in the greenhouse door and watching the operation. How quickly is the gas generated and how rapidly does it spread? Is it heavier or lighter than the atmosphere? In other words, would a man who felt himself being overcome with the gas save himself by dropping to the floor? R. G.

Our experience has shown that hydrocyanic acid gas is not a good insecticide for rose houses. It does not kill thrips readily and is very injurious to the young growth on roses.

The gas, while only a little lighter than air, spreads quite rapidly through a greenhouse. A house 100 feet long and twelve feet wide, walls three feet, seven feet to the ridge, with three jars would be filled with gas in about two minutes. Such a house would require, say for violets, about two pounds of ninety-eight per cent cyanide of potash. This would be divided into three parts, each portion put in a 2-pound light Manila paper sack. Starting at one end, these sacks can be placed in the jars containing the sulphuric acid and water, and the length of time required for the acid to eat through the paper would give the operator sufficient time to get to the others and out of the house safely. The acid will eat through cork, so that the flower-pot with the drainage hole plugged with cork would not be a good vessel to liberate the gas.

The correspondent can obtain full information regarding the use of hydrocyanic acid by writing the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and requesting Circular No. 37 (revised edition) of the Division of Entomology.

Nicotine Preparations.

For thrips in rose houses fairly good results can be obtained by vaporizing the stronger nicotine preparations, either over single-burner oil-stoves or by dropping into the solution pieces of hot iron. A good-sized hot flat-iron, for example, will vaporize about a pint of nicotine extract. For a rose house 100 feet long, eighteen feet wide and ten feet high to the ridge, a pint and a half to two pints of a good nicotine tract vaporized at intervals of a few days will usually destroy thrips.

If the stronger extracts are to be painted on the pipes, the work should be done when the pipes are cool. If steam is used in heating the houses the pipes could be allowed to cool down sufficiently in the middle of the day on a warm day, so that the work could be done without so much discomfort to the men.

A good way, where the stronger extracts are used, is to have a number of vaporizing tanks fitted over the steam pipes or rather attached to the pipes so that the pipes will run through them having from three to five of these vaporizing troughs in a house 100 feet long and eighteen feet wide. The nicotine solution can then be poured into the vaporizing troughs, and the hot pipes will throw it into the atmosphere.

Various other methods of vaporizing are used, but these suggestions will probably be sufficient. A. F. Woods.

WITH THE GROWERS.

Budlong, Sons & Co., Providence.

One of the largest establishments in the east is that of J. A. Budlong, Sons & Co., at Auburn, near Providence, R. I. Until a little over three years ago the firm was noted as one of the biggest producers of vegetables for the market, pickling varieties being their specialty. These they still grow on an immense scale, having some 1,500 acres under cultivation, but whereas a few years ago several miles of sashes were devoted to lettuce culture, this branch has been reduced somewhat and all greenhouses are given up to cut flower production with the exception of one large structure from which a crop of rhubarb is taken to be followed by flowers in early spring. Between the vegetable farms, pickle and vinegar factories and greenhouses an army of 600 to 700 men and women are on the pay rolls at the height of the busy season.

Although so short a time has elapsed since the firm launched into the cut flower business, they have built up one of the finest plants in the country. Several of the long, rather low lettuce houses are given up to carnation culture, the roses occupying the newer ones, these latter being of the most up-to-date types. The largest house, 60x700, is one of the finest in the country. It contains nearly 19,000 Brides and Bridesmaids. One house is 40x700 and two others 22x700. There are two 40x150, one 40x412 and several of smaller size. In regard to varieties, Brides and Maids to the number of 50,000 are planted, the latter having a slight preponderance, 7,500 Killarney, 5,000 Chatenay, 6,000 Liberty, 3,000 Morgan and 3,000 Golden Gate are grown. The last named does well, but will not be grown again, owing to an uncertain call for it.

Richmond will be tried next year to the extent of 3,000 plants. Several thousand Kaiserin lifted from the benches, pruned back and potted up will be benched shortly for summer blooming. Wm. White, the manager of this establishment, is a graduate under Alexander Montgomery at Waban Conservatory. He has certainly done wonders during his short stay here, for stock in all the houses is in excellent condition. There are few commercial places kept so neatly and to those who imagine that second rate goods are raised here a visit will be an eye opener. A house containing 20,000 grafted stock for this season's planting contained as perfect a lot as anyone could wish to see.

Carnations fill quite a number of houses, two 30x500 and several of smaller size. Only a few sorts are grown and these in quantity. Lawson is a prime favorite and succeeds finely. One house containing 13,000 plants was a fine sight. Enchantress is quite at home and carried grand stems, being in big demand. In whites, Boston Market is finer than we have ever seen it. A big house of it was a sheet of bloom, stems long and stiff. Some White Lawson is grown, but it falls far below Boston Market. A batch of rather odd deep-pink-striped Enchantress and one of Red Lawson, both originating here, complete the list of varieties grown. Young stock for next season looked first-class, a big house containing 65,000 boxed off plants being a perfect picture to look upon.

Heating is by steam, three 150 horse-power boilers being used. In addition the steam from two boilers of similar size used for a vinegar factory can be utilized at night. An additional 200 horse-power boiler can be harnessed if needed. In spite of the long distance some of the houses are from the boilers the heating is done very satisfactorily. The rose houses in the large block are connected by corridor through the center, making them very easy of access, one from another.

While some flowers are shipped to New York, the bulk are shipped to Boston, where three salesmen, Messrs. Malley, McAlpine and Glidden, at the Park street market, are kept busy. With the constant additions being made here, the Budlong plant will soon be the largest of its kind in the east. The general excellence in all departments speaks volumes for the skill of the worthy manager, who, like most of good growers, is very modest and unassuming.

GLASS ADVANCES.

At a meeting of glass manufacturers of the country, held March 29 at Pittsburgh, the price of glass was advanced seven and a half per cent. While, at the beginning of the year, the price of glass was low, the demand for greenhouse glass has been phenomenal and the indications now are that a still further advance will occur before the end of the season. As evidence of the unusual demand for greenhouse glass a Cleveland jobber reports the sale of 4,000 boxes of greenhouse glass in the single city of Ashtabula.

evenly. I dust a bed 12x60 feet in two minutes. It is washed off by the first touch of water and, when plants are dry apply again.

My experience is that lettuce should not be watered often, but thoroughly. The so-called lettuce rot is encouraged by continued dampness. When I can see but little of the ground between the plant, thus indicating that there is sufficient air circulation to insure plants drying, I water thoroughly for the last time. This washes off the last dust and a couple of light smokings will answer until the lettuce is cut. Though warned of the ravages of this insect, by this treatment I have kept the bed perfectly clean with no trouble and very little expense.

Lettuce Rot.

Regarding the lettuce rot, which has been shot at so much by the big guns that it seems idle for me to shoot at all; even the governor has fired away and promised a variety so vigorous as to be immune.

I recall that during the war the soldiers were troubled with scurvy, caused by the lack of some ingredient in their very limited menu. Then, too, some of our "upper ten," who have more cents than sense, have the gout, caused by their unlimited menu. Might it not be that in our anxiety to force our lettuce by means of very rich soils, nitrate of soda and other concentrated fertilizers, we give them the gout or scurvy or both and thus render them susceptible to diseases they would otherwise escape?

It is a principle in medicine that a healthy man may ward off even contagious diseases; the deadly germs not being able to find green pasture, die of starvation. Why is not the same principle true in plant life? Might we not escape many of the ills of plant life, if we looked more to such fertilizers as would produce a perfect plant as nature intended, rather than the watery, loose tissue things we often find? And again, there was much complaint in this market last winter about the lettuce being in some cases insipid in flavor and in others of pronounced flavor not usually found in lettuce. To such extent were these manifest that many refused to buy hothouse lettuce, claiming it to be unfit to eat.

Should Seek Flavor Also.

Now, I hold there is something wrong somewhere. Is it in these scientific remedies, or stimulants; which? We of the glass-houses should seek to produce an article not only of size but of flavor. Good butter has that which makes it good—its flavor. Bad butter has its flavor. The same is true of lettuce. Not all lettuce is lettuce. Some is only grass.

I am a "greenfly" at growing lettuce, but by means of good potting soil, I have had no rot, but have produced three crops that have been pronounced the finest flavored, most durable lettuce ever sold in the markets I have supplied.

S. C. T.

TOMATOES.

The accompanying illustration shows the last planting of the season, on which the first fruits are just showing color. The variety is Lorillard, the old standby, which we find the most reliable, as it will succeed under conditions where others would fail, or at least fail to give really good results. We find that it can be grown, if desired, at a temperature at least 5 degrees lower than most of the other varieties. Of course, at a temperature of 55 degrees growth will naturally be slower than at 60 degrees, but it will set freely and produce just as good fruit. If the higher temperature can be given it, so much the better, but it sometimes happens that the command of heat is not so good as might be desired, and in cold spells the house is apt to run a bit low. Under such conditions Lorillard is the variety to grow. We have seen it succeed where Stirling Castle, a free growing and free setting variety under suitable conditions, has failed to give a satisfactory crop.

Lorillard is sometimes inclined to come a bit rough in the fruit. Some attribute this trouble to insufficient pollination, but our observation leads us to believe that it is due more to rankness of growth. Most varieties of tomatoes are rampant growers when allowed free scope in regard to root space and all are more or less inclined to come rough in the flower. Rough flowers usually result in rough fruit, as the pistil, in place of being round, as it would be in a well-formed flower, comes more or less flat shaped, and unevenly formed fruits inevitably follow. Lorillard perhaps is as bad an offender in this respect as any of them, but by confining the roots to a limited space and checking the rank growth, much can be accomplished in the way of producing well-shaped fruits.

The plants here illustrated are grown in boxes thirty inches long, nine inches wide, and eight inches deep. These boxes accommodate three plants nicely when grown to single stems, and we very seldom have much trouble with badly shaped fruits.

In the selection of seed also the trouble may be eliminated to a great extent by selecting well-formed fruits for seed purposes. As quite a number of seeds can be procured from one well-ripened tomato, it does not take so many fruits to give a supply of seed for quite a large forcing establishment. We usually save the seed from the late spring crop, as the weather conditions which prevail at the time they are setting are more congenial to the proper fertilizing of the flowers than in the case of the earlier crops. Hence a larger percentage of the seed is sure to be fertile and well developed.

W. S. CROYDON.

PIPES FOR HOT WATER.

Will a boiler four feet long and thirty inches in diameter, with eleven 3-inch flues, be large enough to heat one greenhouse 20x60? By using an expansion tank how shall I run the pipes? The house will have glass in the east gable and none in the walls. It is sheltered on the west by boiler shed and is two feet in the ground. I wish to run the pipes under the outside benches. I wish to use hot water.

S. C. C.

If the boiler in question is an upright tubular boiler with fire box built in the shell, so that the fire has a water jacket about it, the boiler probably will carry 400 to 450 feet of radiation. The house in question, to be run at 60 degrees, will require 400 feet of radiation and at 70 degrees will require 450 feet. If 2-inch pipes are used, 640 lineal feet will supply 400 square feet of radiation. This is equivalent to saying eleven lines of pipe the length of the house. A 2-inch flow can be arranged under each side bench, one of these flows to supply four and the other to supply five 2-inch returns. The flow pipes should be run from the boiler to the far end of the house and there enter a manifold carrying the returns, four in one case and five in the other. The boiler is a pretty close fit and does not allow much of a margin for safety.

SHADING A PALM HOUSE.

I would beg leave to ask through the columns of your valued paper if any of your readers has had experience with painting glass on the inside of palm houses for the purpose of shading them, and if it can be recommended? Also what was used?

H. D. C.

It is not a good practice to paint the inside of the glass on a palm house for the purpose of shading, from the fact that under such conditions the shading would remain on the glass for the whole year, and the plants would be likely to become thin and drawn from being kept so dark throughout the winter. The shading would also become more dense after a time from the gradual accumulation of dirt on the glass and would therefore be decidedly unsatisfactory.

Establishment of Peirce Bros., Waltham, Mass.

Croydon's Latest Crop of Lorillard Tomatoes.

If inside shading should be decided upon, it would be much better to tack up cheese-cloth or thin muslin, such as may be had from the seedsmen for three or four cents per yard.

One of the most satisfactory shading paints for outside use is composed as follows: Whiting, six pounds; white lead, three pounds; boiled linseed oil, one quart, and kerosene, two gallons. This may be applied with a whitewash brush, and may need renewing twice during the season, or three coats altogether. Some seasons two coats may be enough, this depending largely upon the number of heavy storms during the summer. Whatever may remain until winter will be removed by the action of frost and snow, thus giving light during the latter season.

A mixture of white lead and naphtha is also much used for this purpose.

BOSTON CLUB'S FIELD DAY.

About sixty members of the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club attended the field day on March 31 at the establishments of W. W. Edgar and Peirce Bros. A special car left Park square with the party at 12:30, returning at 5:30 p. m. Mr. Edgar's place at Waverly was first visited.

W. W. Edgar's, Waverly.

Potted plants are chiefly handled here and are in all cases remarkably well grown. Lilies were in prime condition for Easter, some 8,000 being in flower or ready to open. A small percentage only had shown disease this season, which is better than some growers can report.

Azaleas are grown in large numbers. Over 10,000 are handled during the season, the majority being for Easter. A few sorts noted in quantity were Flambeau, Empereur Du Bresil, Mme. Van der Cruyssen, Dr. Moore, Empress of India, Bernard Andre alba and quite a few of the bright little Firefly were also seen. Crimson Rambler and Baby Rambler roses are grown in large numbers.

Some beautiful little plants of the latter were seen. The color is very much paler than the Crimson Rambler, but as a dwarf pot plant it is excellent. Quite a number of hybrid perpetuals were also coming into flower.

Acacia armata, lilacs, Spiraea compacta and S. astilboides and hydrangeas were all coming in nicely. Large numbers of genistas, heavily bloomed from specimen size downward, should sell well. Thousands of geraniums and other bedding plants are grown. Many of the former were well bloomed, especially the scarlet shades.

Eclipse tomato trained up the posts in some of the warmer houses was yielding a fine lot of marketable fruit. Ferns are grown in large numbers. Adiantums for cutting are grown in beds. Such sorts as Cyrtomium falcatum, Pteris cretica and other useful varieties for fern dishes are heavily grown. Some Dendrobium Phalaenopsis Schroederiana evidenced a possible start in orchid culture. Some excellent mignonette, quantities of narcissi in pans and other stock was also seen.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Edgar and family, and three rousing cheers given to Mr. Edgar. A photograph of the members was taken by David Lumsden, the manager, before a move was made to Mr. Edgar's new establishment, a few minutes' walk distant.

Here two houses have been built. One 40x200 is filled with cucumbers in full crop, eight rows of plants being grown. Another, just completed by Lord & Burnham, is also planted with cucumbers. Instead of wires and twine, as is generally employed, wide-meshed netting six inches square is used to tie the plants to. This is inexpensive and is found to answer admirably. Burnham boilers are used for heating, the Holly-Castle circulator being also found of great benefit.

There is an abundant water supply here, excellent facilities for warming water before using it, also liquid manure and excellent soil on the estate. The situation also is ideal for a commercial plant. Here, no doubt, at no distant date Mr. Edgar will center his whole plant. Some nursery stock is grown. A large shed is filled with bay trees and a cellar of mushrooms from milltrack spawn in the rear of the bay tree shed carried as fine a crop as we have ever seen. The Edgar establishment is up-to-date in every way. Father and sons are all wide awake, and with so good a manager as Mr. Lumsden there is no likelihood of its holding anything but a front position in the future as it has in the past.

Peirce Bros., Waltham.

Messrs. Allan and Herbert W. Peirce conducted the members to their big plant in Waltham after leaving Mr. Edgar's. The first houses inspected were new ones built last season, each 36x300 and filled with carnations. These have the everlasting tile benches, and each hold some 12,000 plants. Several other houses are also devoted to carnations, over 60,000 being grown altogether. The principal sorts handled are Lawson, Enchantress, Mrs. Patten and Gov. Guild. The latter is a very promising scarlet seedling raised here and filled one large house. Red Lawson, Prosperity, Nelson Fisher,

Some beautiful little plants of the latter were seen. The color is very much paler than the Crimson Rambler, but as a dwarf pot plant it is excellent. Quite a number of hybrid perpetuals were also coming into flower.

Acacia armata, lilacs, Spiraea compacta and S. astilboides and hydrangeas were all coming in nicely. Large numbers of genistas, heavily bloomed from specimen size downward, should sell well. Thousands of geraniums and other bedding plants are grown. Many of the former were well bloomed, especially the scarlet shades.

Eclipse tomato trained up the posts in some of the warmer houses was yielding a fine lot of marketable fruit. Ferns are grown in large numbers. Adiantums for cutting are grown in beds. Such sorts as Cyrtomium falcatum, Pteris cretica and other useful varieties for fern dishes are heavily grown. Some Dendrobium Phalanopsis Schroederiana evidenced a possible start in orchid culture. Some excellent mignonette, quantities of narcissi in pans and other stock was also seen.

Refugees were received by Mr. Edgar and family, and three roosting chicks given to Mr. Edgar. A photograph of the members was taken by David Lundgren, the manager, before a move was made to Mr. Edgar's new establishment a few minutes' walk distant.

Here two houses have been raised. The 40x200 is filled with cucumbers in full crop, eight rows of plants to a row. Another, just completed by Lord & Barnham, is also planted with cucumbers. Instead of wires and twine, as is generally employed, wide meshed netting six inches square is used to tie the plants to. This is inexpensive and is found to answer admirably. Barnham boilers are used for heating, the Holly-Castle regulator being also found of great benefit.

There is an abundant water supply here, excellent facilities for warming water before using it, also input machine and excellent soil on the estate. The situation also is ideal for a commercial plant. Here, no doubt, at no distant date Mr. Edgar will enter his whole plant. Some nursery stock is grown. A large shed is filled with bay trees and a cellar of mushrooms from milltrack spawn in the rear of the bay tree shed carried as fine a crop as we have ever seen. The Edgar establishment is up-to-date in every way. Father and sons are all wide awake, and with so good a manager as Mr. Lundgren there is no likelihood of its holding anything but a front position in the future as it has in the past.

Peirce Bros., Waltham.

Messrs. Allan and Herbert W. Peirce conducted the members to their big plant in Waltham after leaving Mr. Edgar's. The first houses inspected were new ones built last season, each 36x300 and filled with carnations. These have the everlasting tile benches, and each room some 12,000 plants. Several other houses are also devoted to carnations, over 60,000 being grown altogether. The principal sorts handled are Lawson, Eucantress, Mrs. Patten and Goy, Guild. The latter is a very promising scarlet seedling raised here and filled one large house. Red Lawson, Prosperity, Nelson, Fisher

New Cucumber House 40x200 at W. W. Edgar's, Waverly, Mass.

Queen, Boston Market, White/Lawson, Flamingo and Fiancee are also grown. The last named showed its usual bursting propensities. Some good seedlings were also in evidence.

Easter lilies are grown here in immense numbers, and 35,000 pots were in splendid condition for Easter. It was a magnificent sight to stand and look over the long houses filled with these. Probably no other place in America grows more or better lilies than that of Peirce Bros. To move such numbers by hand would be a tremendous task, so a most ingenious truck system is used in the houses. Several of these when loaded are placed on a large cable car which is run through the wide, covered shed connecting all the houses and hauled expeditiously to the packing rooms or teams. The numerous lily teams had just had a new coat of paint and looked spick and span for the strenuous Easter trade.

Asparagus Sprengeri fills a number of houses. A batch of 3,500 cyclamen just potted look promising for another season's crop. Chrysanthemums in benches are grown to the number of 60,000. Spiraeas are grown for Decoration day trade and 10,000 clumps had just been boxed. Tomatoes also are largely handled, also azaleas. No part of the big plant is ever allowed to stand idle.

club for courtesies extended, and called on Messrs. E. O. Orpet, T. J. Guy, T. H. Westwood, J. A. Pettigrew and others for short addresses. Three vociferous cheers for the Peirce Bros. ended one of the most delightful and profitable field days the club has yet held.

THAT DAYTON PICTURE.

That picture of the group photographed at Dayton, published a couple of weeks ago, was a dandy. The president is certainly a handsome man and is brim full of satisfaction, as he deserves to be. The ex-president is looking like a patriarch, venerable of appearance, and what you would expect the future senator of Oklahoma to be. Mr. Hallock looks just what he is—a solid, good, sensible man, who is exactly the sort to guide the destiny of our great society. Mr. Elliott, of asparagus fame, has aged, like many of us—cool, sober, industrious and earnest in all undertakings.

George Asmus has the appearance we have all seen at the Fort Erie races when a "ten-to-one shot" poked its nose in front and he had put on a "ten spot." Confidence and good nature are blended in that sweet smile. As to "Grandpa" Hauswirth, in the back-ever. Do they lie like infants entering balmy sleep, worn out by the exertions and excitement of the day? Not so as you can notice it! They are more as you can imagine the witches of Shakespeare, in "Macbeth," having only one hour on earth, making the most of it in a saturnalia. We have passed through it once and lived, but could never be tempted again. Our constitution has been impaired ever since.

Secretary Stewart is getting white and it becomes him. He has grown old in the service of the society, and when he feels like shedding the mantle of care it will not be easy to replace him.

Steady-going Vice-President Altick has a retired position in the group. He ought to be more conspicuous, for his ability, integrity and thoroughness are to help largely in making the Dayton convention a great success. Mr. Altick is one of the best trap shooters of the country, and when he says "pull" the inanimate clay target is as good as shattered. Another instance that you cannot become illustrious or popular unless you have a large infusion of sport in your blood. Live pigeons Mr. Altick does not kill. Like W. K. Harris and your humble servant, he does not allow his better nature to shoot at a bird sitting on a branch of a tree or a poor tame dove trying to find his way home. W. K. Harris once wrote me two beautiful stanzas on this subject. This was some six years ago. The first verse was most touching. The second is preserved for future perusal because I could not decipher it, but I gloat on its beauty, and shall carry it to paradise or Tona-wanda.

Mr. Traendly looks what he is, a good-natured, manly man, worthy of the highest honors the society has to offer. We don't know Mr. Traendly as intimately as we do others of the committee, but we do know that he is a jolly good fellow and of the right kind. I am told he is able to give Pat O'Mara a good answer back, and that takes more than Chicago gall.

The young man of the cash register company is, it will be noticed, quite youthful. Such is the order of the day. Big corporations look for youth. There is no doubt youth has the vim, energy and alertness, but for all that the molecules in the gray matter mature at a late period of life, and I don't see that he is any more intellectual looking than the men engaged in the glorious calling of horticulture.

If this party were to take a trip around the world with their matrons and maidens, you could easily imagine the respective duties each would be assigned: Vaughan would be the treasurer. Kasting would see that there was plenty to eat. Traendly would secure vaudeville attractions. Elliott would see that all behavior was decorous. Hallock would say, "God bless you, my children; have all the fun you like." Altick would tell us they needed $50,000 more to complete the McKinley monument, and only 35 cents to complete the Grover Cleveland statue. Stewart's duties would be to find stray ladies of the party who had lost themselves in Canton or Algiers. Phil Hauswirth would give tips on the races in any city where races were on, and George Asmus would visit the several ambassadors of leading countries and inform them that he was from Chicago.

OBITUARY.

Thos. Devoy, Poughkeepsie.

Thomas Devoy, one of the oldest residents of Poughkeepsie, died Thursday, March 29, at 10 p. m., in his seventy-fourth year. Mr. Devoy had not been in good health for some time. He was born in Ireland, town of Kilcullen, May 14, 1832. At the early age of 12 years he entered the employ of the Hon. Robert LaTouch, at Harristown. Here he served five years in the conservatories, grape houses and garden. Like many of his native land in those days, being desirous of branching out, Mr. Devoy came to America in 1851, and entered the employ of M. Pease, of Williamsburgh, Brooklyn, N. Y.

In 1856 he removed to Poughkeepsie to take charge of the greenhouse and garden of Matthew Vassar, at Springside, which position he resigned to take an engagement with Prof. Samuel F. B. Morse. Mr. Devoy served Prof. Morse until his death, and the Morse family for thirty-eight years, and to his skill and good taste the beautiful place of Prof. Morse was largely due.

Mr. Devoy was a gardener and plantsman by natural gift, and his genius brought to him many honors and trophies, won at various exhibitions during his engagement with the Morse family, and later when in business for himself, having established a commercial place with his son on Worrall avenue, Poughkeepsie, in 1884, where he was engaged at the time of his death.

Thomas Devoy was a man of sterling character, and esteemed by all who knew him. By his industry and his fidelity to duty and to friends he made for himself a place in the world, of which those who mourn for him may well be proud.

He was among the earliest members of St. Peter's parish, and later belonged to St. Mary's congregation. Mr. Devoy is survived by one son, Peter Devoy, and two daughters.

Henry E. Riedel, Brooklyn.

Henry E. Riedel died Saturday, March 31, at his home, 156 Knickerbocker avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. He was one of the old time florists, having been in the business for over forty years. He leaves a widow, two sons and two daughters. The funeral services were held on Tuesday and burial was in Lutheran cemetery. One of his sons is with A. J. Guttman, New York, as foreman in the wholesale department. The sympathy of the trade is extended the bereaved family.

Benjamin Love, Toledo.

Benjamin Love, retired, of Toledo, O., who during forty-five years was prominent in business circles of that city, died March 28. For six years he had been suffering from organic heart trouble, and in December last he was attacked with rheumatism of the heart. He had recovered in a measure from that, but about ten days ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis and he had failed steadily since.

Mr. Love came to Toledo from Toronto in 1861 and engaged in the florist and nursery business with George Baker, and later with Henry Phillips. He retired a number of years ago.

A Well Displayed Handbill.

With the Advertising Man

An Ad-vantage.

"He who would add unto his trade Should have an 'ad.,' and well displayed. For 'ads.,' if one knows how to write 'em, Add to one's trade ad infinitum."

As an inexpensive and effective method of advertising, nothing can equal the handbill, if rightly used.

Now understand me when I say if used rightly, because there is a right and wrong way of doing this just the same as anything else, and upon the method of handling depends whether or not it will be profitable or unprofitable.

Ever since you were a boy you have seen common, ordinary "dodgers" scattered on the street and on people's doorsteps.

While, of course, these attract more or less attention, they do not sell goods like a handbill on the order of the one shown here.

In your handbills, the same as all other advertising, there must be good, logical reasons why people should buy of you, and as previously stated, unless an "ad" does this, it falls short of the mark.

Having a well displayed circular, the careful distribution is important. To send them by mail would be too expensive. You can cover your town or your neighborhood, putting one in every house, but hire responsible people to do it; better yet, cover a small territory each day by your own help, sending them out at hours when they can be spared. In many towns the distributors of city papers will insert your handbill for a small fee, one in each paper they deliver.

In my own business I follow this method very persistently, with the result that I have built up a large retail trade.

Advertising is one of the best methods of giving your customers confidence in you and in the goods themselves, and if handled rightly, will be one of the very best investments you ever made.

This is a plant that is big, bulky and showy but was never a favorite here and we can get along just fine without it.

As to there being an opening here for a first class grower, we doubt it. It is not that we fear opposition, no, we should all rejoice to have another such who could set an example and teach us how to do things to perfection, but conditions are so different in the big cities mentioned, as well as at Chicago and Boston. Here there is scarcely a retail store which has not some growing house and you may be sure a man will not buy another's stock as long as he has his own product, let it be ever so inferior.

In the very large cities there are dozens of fine stores which depend on the growers in their different lines to supply them with everything they handle. This is division of labor, and I think a division we are all coming to. It's correct. The man who insists on offering flowers and plants of his own growing will have many inferior to those shown by his neighbor, the retailer, who has had the opportunity to buy the very best in the market.

There has been quite a stir here of late regarding the price of rental of stalls in the Washington market. The holder of a stall pays from $50 to $100 per year to the city, while a block away on Main street for a small store you pay $2,000. This is a grievance. The wooden stall in the public market may not have the conveniences of a store, although the stall holder has the privilege of making it as substantial and ornamental as he chooses. But talk about meeting the people! For every one who glances into your store there are twenty who gape and stare and ask the price of your attractions on the market. You will say, "but most of them are poor people; not all classes patronize the public market." We learn every day of our best people, which in modern phraseology means people of abnormal wealth, making constant visits to the markets. The majority of wealthy men will go farther out of their way to save 10 cents than the struggling man of moderate means. They began saving in this way and as years roll by and affluence is reached this thrifty habit does not depart from them.

We know something about the market. In 1866 and 1867 we subrented a stall from April 1 to July 1. At that time the Lady Washington, alias Martha Washington, alias the show pelargonium, was a new and popular plant and we sold many thousands and never had so much ready cash, before or since. Specie payment began to appear in 1867 and we thought it would be cute to put all silver money away and not touch it. We filled up all the empty trunks and boxes in our possession and then we found that it would be more sensible to put away all five-dollar bills, so we began to put all that fell our way between the pages of the first volume of Loudon's Encyclopedia of Gardening. At the present writing the boxes are empty and this wonderful volume has gone back to its normal size.

Since we have had so many dwarf Japan lilies a good use has been made of them by making up 8-inch to 12-inch azalea pots, or half pots, as they are known. If your lilies are in 6-inch pots you can, after the buds are open, or just about to open, with a big sharp knife slice the 6-inch ball down to one-fourth its original size and the lilies will last just as long as if their roots had been untouched. W. S.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.—It is reported that H. A. Jahn has declined an offer of $8,000 from one of the concerns at Joliet, Ill., for his new white carnation, No. 49.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Judging from reports of the different dealers trade the past week has been very fair. No complaint is heard. Possibly they do not expect as much trade on account of the fact that Easter business will soon be on. Some of the dealers already are making store preparations. In almost every store some Easter plants are to be seen.

While the city purchaser has not done much in the way of placing orders, the country trade has been doing quite the reverse. Already numerous orders for Easter plants have been booked by the larger dealers, and, judging from present prospects, we are going to have a heavy trade. If we are favored with weather such as we have had the past week, trade, no doubt, will be the largest we have had for some time.

The growers all appear to be well satisfied with the outlook, and, without exception, they are all prepared for a heavy demand. The larger growers have in stock from 3,000 to 5,000 fine Easter lilies. One fact is noticeable—a majority of them are growing the longiflorum in preference to the Harrisii. The diseased Harrisii lilies of a few seasons ago has made the average grower somewhat afraid to plant a great many of them. Then, again, they report difficulty in getting the true Harrisii.

Baby Ramblers are grown quite extensively, one grower in particular having fully 1,000 very fine plants in bloom, which will sell at wholesale at $1 each. A uniform price of 25 cents per lily or bud, for lily plants, is quoted. A plant with four lilies would sell for $1, and so on, according to the number of buds or blooms on the plant. Hydrangeas are quoted from 75 cents to $3 and $4; spiraeas, 75 cents to $2; cinerarias, from 50 cents to $1.50. The cut flower market is very easy and, while stock is not so abundant as it has been the past few weeks, we still have an ample supply.

Minneapolis.

John Monson possibly has the largest Easter stock. His Baby Ramblers, grown in a cool house, are about the best in this section.

Donaldson's Glass Block will no doubt have a large number of all varieties of blooming plants, but it is doubtful if they will have a sufficient amount to supply their large retail trade.

The New York Floral Co. is still disposing of large numbers of carnations daily. The large cuts made by some of our growers have reduced the price considerably. In consequence they sell them somewhat cheaper than the other florists.

The Greeks on the street are handling considerable stock, mostly carnations and bulbous stock and, on account of the spring weather, they have been able to cut into the sales to some extent.

St. Paul.

Aug. S. Swanson is making a great display with his new rose, The Minnehaha. He has, in the windows of his Sixth street store, a large oil painting of Minnehaha falls surrounded by large numbers of his rose, which is an attractive feature.

Holm & Olson have leased the large store formerly occupied by Howard Farwell & Co., piano dealers. This will give them a great deal more room and a much better location.

Vogt Bros. are settled in their new location and are now on one of the best streets in the city for a fashionable trade. They report good business the past week.

L. L. May & Co. have had considerable funeral work, one of the largest pieces made during the week being a floral pen in violets on a large back of white carnations. The piece was nicely made by J. W. Hoffman. FELIX.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market stays down, as is its habit the second week before Easter. It always did. It always will. It was so last year and you can bank on it for 1907. There will be little change before next Monday. Then will the tide flow in again and holiday values will begin. Beauties may go to 50 cents each, violets to $1 per hundred. There will be no abnormal rise in the cut flower market.

Last week was a blue one for everybody. Even the weather was tinged with sadness. Roses at $10 per thousand were very abundant. Nothing of moment in decoration or funerals stirred the unruffled sea of monotony. Beauties, the best of them, fell to $20 per hundred and Brides and Maids to $5 per hundred. These were top and few there were that found it. Violets and carnations, too, receded to the lowest of the year. Still the quality of everything was superb. Lilies hold up well and 10 cents per bud is easily obtainable. They may do even better for Easter.

Various Notes.

Wadley & Smythe have 2,000 of Walsh's best ramblers, Lady Gay, Hiawatha and Wedding Bells. Thos. Wade, the firm's representative, will exhibit one of each at the club's meeting next Monday evening. Benj. Dorrance will give one of his original talks, always interesting, and many of the new varieties seen at Boston are expected to be staged. The members of the outgoing committee are requested to be at the hall as early as possible.

John J. Foley has a fine establishment on the Bowery. Born in 1863, in Ireland, he came to America when very young, his first experience in the florists' business being with Alex. McConnell. His first store was at 189 Bowery. Soon he was obliged to move to larger quarters and now he occupies the entire building at 226 and 228. Mr. Foley's home is at Madison, where his greenhouse plant is situated.

Alex. McConnell still holds the fort at the corner of Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street. Preparations are made for a tremendous plant Easter. A novelty in pottery from Liberty, England, is on exhibition here.

The Rosary, which many call the most artistic flower shop in the world, makes a finer display than ever this year.

Wm. H. Donohoe has already an established business, built up rapidly since last Easter and growing daily.

Jos. Leikens is another of the young men in floriculture, close to the Waldorf-Astoria and with a branch business at Newport that bids fair to compare with many that have existed for a generation.

A. Warrendorff now directs the destinies of three elegant flower shops, two on Broadway and one on Madison avenue, all a credit to him. The main store on Broadway, near Twenty-eighth street, is always a center of admiration to the "madding crowd" that walks "the great white way."

Phil Kessler is handling all the sweet peas of George Matthews, Great Neck, L. I., stock with fifteen to eighteen-inch stems in purple, lavender, pink and white and in great demand. Mr. Kessler has just purchased an acre of Great Neck land, where real estate grows in value over night.

M. A. Bowe's transient trade alone is enough to keep a quartet busy, but the millionaire family trade accounts for the autos and footman and other luxuries. It's a great corner, this heart of New York.

Charles Millang is recovering rapidly now from the severe illness which has laid him on the shelf a fortnight. Imagine Charlie keeping still as long as that!

Alex. J. Guttman will make his summer home at his greenhouse establishment at Summit. His move to Twenty-eighth street has proved a most profitable venture. Business has grown 100 per cent in the last year.

James McManus will soon have his headquarters established in the big store at 42 W. Twenty-eighth street. There will be none too much room for the phenomenal business he has built up in the orchid world.

J. K. Allen has been on deck at 6 a. m. every morning for nearly twenty years and yet J. K. looks like a two-year-old and his business grows.

James Hart, wholesaler for thirty-five years, holds the record and now is located in the biggest store in wholesaledom, on West Twenty-eighth street, which seems now to be the Mecca of concentration.

Ford Bros. have no regrets because of moving to Twenty-eighth street. They sail on an even keel and on a placid ocean of prosperity.

H. E. Froment is holding the big business established by W. Ghormley and steadily adding to it. His violet trade is enormous.

Moore, Hentz & Nash have had a vigorous and successful year. Quality is the watchword, courtesy and consideration the rule. The Coogan building would be incomplete without them.

Joseph Fenrich is now permanently located at 110 West Twenty-eighth street. He is the youngest wholesaler and before long it will be Fenrich & Son, so the house should hold together a century. This is where Totty's Richmonds come and go.

Wm. Starke is completing his greenhouse back of his store at 52 W. Twenty-ninth street. Just what he needed most. Already he is crowded with Easter plants.

John Seligman and Jos. J. Levy make a strong and bustling team and are rapidly building up a clientele. Their headquarters opposite the Coogan building are very convenient and everything indicates ambition and progress.

The Limprecht Florist Supply Co. is ready for Easter. No enterprise is too large for Max to tackle successfully.

The Geller Florist Supply Co. is now fully established at 38 West Twenty-ninth street, close to Gunther's and Saltford's, in a most convenient spot. Grass growing designs, ferneries and ribbons are among the specialties.

The membership of the National Florists' Board of Trade has grown nearly half a hundred since December.

S. Rodh and Young & Nugent last week were next door to a fire that threatened the whole wholesale district. Mr. Rodh's stock of ribbons was uninjured.

Young & Nugent's window, with its brilliant and novel lights and its artistic arrangements of flowers, is always a center of attraction, especially since Mr. Nugent has again put on the harness. His hand has not forgot its cunning.

A. Moltz has a very convenient store on the first floor of the Coogan building.

Wm. H. Gunther and his brothers constitute a triumvirate that it would be hard to discount. What this trio does not know about legitimate sport and histrionic ability isn't worth knowing. They are close to Broadway in every respect.

A. L. Young & Co. are growing rapidly. Mr. Henshaw's lieutenantancy and rose shipments are a great addition to the efficiency of the establishment.

I am very well pleased with your paper,

THE WEEKLY
FLORISTS' REVIEW

Saved several times the subscription price on the first order of plants I sent after getting the paper, and not a week passes but I learn something of value from its pages.

C. D. OTIS.

Lake Charles, La.

March 16, 1906.

The three big retail stores of Thos. Young, Jr., are all bowers of beauty. Such hydrangeas and ramblers are hard to duplicate.

John J. Perkins still maintains his prestige at 115 W. Thirtieth street. Thirty-four years is a good record.

A. J. Fellouris will soon establish his headquarters in his new building at 52 W. Twenty-eighth street, a most desirable and convenient center. The rise and progress of this house has been remarkable.

Geo. Cotsonas & Co. carry an immense stock of green goods. Mr. Cotsonas is a popular, genial and persistent worker, attending personally to all the details of his business.

N. LeCakes & Co. have about everything the florist needs; cut flowers, plants and green goods. Mr. Foley takes care of the books and still superintends the cut flower department. Four stalwart Helenes constitute the company.

Harry Bunyard, with Arthur T. Bodington, cut his hand badly last week while handling bulb boxes.

On the big steamer Amerika came home from his European trip on Saturday one of the big plantsmen of America, Julius Roehrs, of Carlton Hill, N. J.

John N. May, of Summit, and his daughter are forgetting the unseasonable weather in balmy Florida.

The bulb men are here in shoals. The Broadway Central seems to be their headquarters in New York. I met M. J. Rosbergen, of K. Rosbergen & Son, and Mr. Endtz, of Endtz, Van Nes & Co., both of Boskoop, Holland, out on Long Island one day last week, and both were in a happy frame of mind. They found every grower sold out for Easter and with large orders ready for next season. Very pleasant, practical, clean fellows, these healthy Dutchmen are.

C. W. Ward is back from his western trip, just in time to receive his large importation of nursery stock. The Cottage Gardens Co. is building extensively this spring; three enormous greenhouses, averaging 15,000 square feet each, and a big office building.

McIntosh had his usual pre-Easter $500 basket last week for his perennial millionaire. This time it was made of Crimson Ramblers, lilies and orchids, with a crown of violets.

R. Dreyer, with his 60,000 square feet of new glass and his fine establishment beyond Woodside, is in high spirits. Easter orders are earlier and heavier than ever. And so it is over at Schultheis', in College Point, and at Dupuy's, Hinode's, Pankok & Schumacher's and Darlington's at Whitestone, and so it is, I understand, at Flatbush and in Jersey and wherever handsome plants are grown.

Dreyer's azaleas and hydrangeas are especially fine. Of the latter 10,000 are imported yearly. He has 20,000 Brunner and Magna Charta roses in bloom and lots of Baby Ramblers. He devotes one house to Scottii and six to his favorite white carnation, Bertha Rath.

Schultheis is the Rambler king. His Crimson Rambler and Dorothy Perkins are grand specimens. Dupuy's clematis, blue hydrangeas and crassulas are very attractive. "Sold out two weeks ago," was his greeting.

Pankok & Schumacher's bougainvilleas and Ramblers are especially fine. Mr. Pankok and family leave late in April for a summer in Europe.

The Easter price of lilies in pots is 12 cents everywhere, and every good flower has been sold at that figure. If any cut below it the stock was inferior or the cutting was entirely unnecessary. Prices for everything average about the same as last season.

The Julius Roehrs Co., over at Rutherford, is well prepared as usual for the Easter season, but the orchids are off crop and out of the twenty-five big houses devoted to them will hardly be cut enough for a funeral wreath.

Over the way, at Bobbink & Atkins', there is a great display of palms, bay trees, nursery stock, blue spruce, evergreens, herbaceous stock and blooming plants. The past year is the banner one with them.

Brooklyn.

Brooklyn has advanced into the front rank during the past year and feels quite independent. Its wholesale and retail departments compare boldly with the Manhattan borough of the big city.

Last week Brooklyn added another wholesaler to its record, George Crawbuck, Jr., having arrived from babyland. The firm of Hicks & Crawbuck, Inc., is still celebrating the event. This house contemplates extensive enterprises for the present year and great preparations have been made for Easter.

Bonnet & Blake have had a very successful year, so much so they are reaching out for more room to accommodate both shippers and customers.

W. H. Kuebler has grown rapidly. His new store at 28 Willoughby is as good as they make 'em, but I think another Easter will find even this too small for him.

Henry R. Crawbuck is the only wholesale green goods man in Brooklyn, and the city seems to appreciate him and the convenience he affords it. His business grows.

Another Brooklynite, Robert G. Wilson, conducts a fine retail establishment, while over on West Thirtieth street in New York he is reaching out for his share of the wholesale trade. There is no limit to the ambition of the Brooklynites.

Phillips, Weir, Masur, Mallon and a host of retailers vie with each other and with New York in the artistic floral displays they make daily, and every Easter adds to their skill and reputation.

Some day Brooklyn will be larger than Manhattan, for it has more room to grow in.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Extreme dullness on some days and a good clearing out on others has characterized the past week's market. On the whole, it must be classed as satisfactory. Roses are more abundant and a dragging tendency in them is noticeable. The best grades of Beauties are now remarkably fine. Prices on them yield very little. Brides and Maids are a little lower, especially on the poorer grades. Some very nice Safrano and Bon Silene are seen, and these make very fair prices, being in demand at the most up-to-date stores. Carnations remain about the same. There seems a likelihood of a shortage in fancies for Easter. Violets are fairly firm at 50 and 75 cents per hundred. Singles will not be sufficiently plentiful for Easter calls, although they are still arriving and of very fine quality.

Nice Spanish iris is coming from one or two growers. There is only a moderate call for cut Easter lilies. Probabilities are that there will be enough plants of these for all requirements. Twelve cents per bloom seems to be accepted as the general price, although some are offering them at 10 cents. Some extra fine mignonette and antirrhinums are coming in. Asparagus and adiantum are each in abundant supply.

Various Notes.

A new auction seller of horticultural supplies has entered the local field in the person of J. J. McCormick, who will hold weekly sales of hardy roses, box trees, hydrangeas and other nursery stock at 1 and 2 Somerset street. The auctioneer is the veteran and inimitable Edward Hatch, which is of itself sufficient to ensure success for the new venture.

Welch Bros. are making extensive preparations for their Easter trade, which this year will far surpass all previous records. They have acquired the store adjoining their present one, which will practically double their floor capacity. It will be used largely for plants at Easter, to relieve the congestion in their other store. A most up-to-date new telephone system is being installed and everything possible being done to keep the firm still at the head of its kind.

Alexander McKay is sending in some grand Lilium longiflorum to the market. He has 4,000 of these about right for Easter. He is still cutting very fine freesia.

J. A. Pettigrew will speak on "The Embellishment of Streets and Waysides" at the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on April 17. The tickets for the club banquet on April 25 are selling rapidly and a remarkable attendance is already assured.

W. W. Rawson & Co. announce that they will open for business at their old stand within a few days. Work on the burned structure is being rushed with all possible haste.

W. C. Ward is one of the new stall holders at the Park street market. He is handling quantities of splendid pansies, in the culture of which he is one of the leaders.

Mann Bros., of Randolph, are bringing in their usual large supplies of lilies, rambler roses in variety, spiræas and other pot plants. In cut flowers they have very fine snapdragons and double tulips.

J. Tailby & Son, of Wellesley, are handling some excellent Spanish iris, which they grow quite extensively.

R. & J. Farquhar's new nursery will be located at Dedham, within convenient access of their store by team, and not Bedford, as stated in a recent issue.

The Boston Sunday Herald of April 1 contained an excellent illustrated article on W. W. Rawson and his extensive experiments in growing vegetables under glass by the aid of electric light at his Arlington establishment.

Our local dailies have had numerous stories of late about F. R. Pierson Co.'s $6,000 Winsor carnation and H. A. Jahn's $8,000 white seedling. It is surprising how many of the public came to the recent show purposely to see these "late floral creations."

A. W. Kidder continues to send in Princess of Wales violets of remarkable quality which are in brisk demand.

Galvin, on Tremont street, is showing some nice Dendrobium thyrsiflorum, also Cattleya Schrøderæ and C. Mossiæ.

Carbone has been handling some very fine Dorothy Perkins roses grown by Thomas Roland. He has had a fine lot of the beautiful Narcissus Victoria of late.

Sidney Hoffman, at his Massachusetts avenue store, has an effective arrangement of specimen white azaleas in the center of his windows with a band of Crimson Rambler roses around them.

The closing lecture of the season at Horticultural hall, by Prof. Powell, on "Economic Mycology" took place March 31, before a good audience.

March proved the coldest of its name for eleven years, with a surplus of precipitation both in the form of rain and snow. It went out cold, and planting therefore is being delayed, but should start with a rush towards the end of the present week.

Gypsy moth caterpillars have already been seen, and the war on the moth pests must soon be carried on with redoubled vigor. The state is petitioned for $150,000 more to add to a like amount already appropriated towards the suppression of the brown-tail and gypsy moths this season.

Receipts at the recent spring exhibition considerably exceeded those of 1905, when the Rose Society also met here, although the former show lasted four days and the more recent one only three days.

James Hutchinson, orchid grower for Oakes Ames, of North Easton, succeeds Axel Bjorn in charge of the collection of Dr. J. F. Shafer, Pittsburg, Pa.

J. T. Butterworth is commencing to cut some fine Cattleya Mossiæ. He has some of the best lily of the valley ever grown for the Boston market.

H. H. Barrows & Son report a phenomenal advance sale of their new Nephrolepis Whitmani as a result of the recent exhibition in Boston.

W. N. CRAIG.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

A Good Grower.

One of the best growers for the Providence market is James Burke, manager of the J. A. Foster plant at Warwick. A recently erected house contains as fine a lot of Lawson and Enchantress as one could wish to see. The Queen also succeeds unusually well here, having better stems than are usually seen in winter. Bedding stock is grown in large quantities, there being a heavy local demand for the same. Ten thousand geraniums and big lots of cannas, petunias, vincas, ageratums and other sorts are handled. Tomatoes were fruiting well in one house in which picking began in December. After a trial of a number of sorts, Lorillard is now exclusively grown. White fly is easily controlled by the use of hydrocyanic acid gas. In addition to the greenhouses quite a considerable area is devoted to nursery stock, for which there is a steady demand in the vicinity. Everything here denoted that a thoroughly up-to-date man was in charge.

Various Notes.

Plans are out for a splendid block of houses on Senator N. W. Aldrich's palatial estate at Warwick Neck, where F. C. Green is superintendent. These, when erected, will be among the finest in the east.

C. S. McNair, on Weybosset street, has one of the best equipped flower stores to be seen anywhere. He is making active preparations for a big Easter trade, which, it is expected, will be of unusually heavy proportions. The telautograph is found of great assistance here for communicating from the store to the basement, where designs are made. The excellent arrangement of mirrors and unique electric lighting plan excites admiration.

Johnston Bros., on Westminster street, have some remarkably well grown Nephrolepis elegantissima. I noted a vase of Brides which would have rendered a good account of themselves at the recent Boston rose show.

T. J. Johnston, on Weybosset street, has the distinction of being the only commercial man privileged to handle the new Nephrolepis Whitmani. The cut fronds are found very valuable for decorative purposes. A vase of Lilium candidum was the first of that fine variety I had seen this season.

Among the visitors from here to the late rose exhibition in Boston were T. McCarthy, Wm. Appleton, F. C. Green, Sweeney, T. J. Johnston and W. E. Chapelle.

Several members of the local florists' club will attend the banquet of the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club April 25.

Business has been rather dull of late, but a big Easter trade is anticipated.

W. N. C.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut flower trade in this city the past week was anything but good; in fact, the whole month of March there was little doing except for funerals. The weather had a great deal to do with the dull business. Just six clear days during the month, and five snow storms. Saturday was the first day that looked like spring. The baseball season opened that day and everybody wore a white or a red rose, the colors of the two local teams. The south end florists had quite a busy day on Friday with funeral work, and the wholesalers cleaned up pretty well.

Stock has shortened up again and prices, of course, have risen. There is a fair lot of roses in the market. The cloudy weather seems to have put a stop to the big consignments of carnations that glutted the market a week ago; still enough are in for the demand. Bulbous stock continues scarce and will be until Easter. Violets, too, have shortened up considerably.

Various Notes.

Alex. Siegle and John Burke spent a few days in Chicago the past week. Charles Cannon had charge of their stores while they were away.

A new seed house has opened at 912 N. Broadway under the name of the Teasdale Seed Co. They report a good opening trade.

The Ellison Floral Co. has its downtown branch, in Simmons' store, in working order. Arthur Ellison has charge.

James Dunford has a fine lot of Spiraea Gladstone, all perfect plants, for which he has taken a great many orders.

Wm. Schray & Sons have a fine lot of azaleas, hybrid roses, Ramblers, lilies and other blooming stock, which will be just right for Easter. Their new canna, Superior, is selling well.

The St. Louis Palm Co. has to vacate its present location in a few weeks. New quarters have been found at 1010 Olive street.

Philip Gieble, who has been at Tower Grove park for many years, on April 1 took a position at Reservoir park. He has been sick since January 1, but now is as well as ever.

James Gurney, superintendent of Tower Grove park, is spending a few weeks at Eureka Springs, Ark. James Gurney, Jr., is in charge of the park.

The club meeting will take place next Thursday afternoon, April 12, just three days before Easter. Good chance for the growers to sell some of their surplus blooming plants. President Ammann is looking for a large attendance.

Bowling.

The florist bowlers defeated the strong Reliance team, March 29, winning three games by the following scores:

Player.	1st	2d	3d
Ellison	176	210	163
Kuehn	180	167	198
Schreffler	182	149	169
Beneke	183	159	143

BROOKLYN, O.—M. Bloy is showing some particularly fine sweet peas, large flowers and stems ten to twelve inches long, at the well kept establishment of the Ohio Floral Co.

NORTHERN TEXAS.

The past week has been the most disagreeable one that I have experienced, rain all the time, with chilly northeast winds, and, although the thermometer did not go below 28 degrees, it felt cold and raw. When the wind changes or it gets cloudy, the people shut themselves up, social functions cease and business gets to look gloomy. All classes of work out-of-doors has stopped, planters cannot get into the fields, nurserymen cannot plant their seedlings, and people cannot visit the greenhouses. But they say evil produces good, so we have the consolation of knowing that the weather is holding back Easter stock, which was coming along too fast.

Things at present are quiet, a few funerals taking up the greater part of the stock. Carnations are looking well at some places, while at one or two places they are done for. My experience so far tells me that the cooler carnations are grown here the better they bloom; those here who advocated running their houses at a night temperature of 60 degrees are regretting they did so now.

Various methods of manuring are tried with varying success; among others, cottonseed meal, a fertilizer to me of doubtful quality, considering the tendency of some plants to disease and stem-rot.

What seems to me the greatest cause of failure, or partial success, lies in the weak, diseased cutting and planting the bench with weak stock improperly pinched back, overwatered when first planted, neglecting to ventilate when needed, and, in their eagerness to get results, many rely upon their own judgment instead of watching conditions closely and profiting by those conditions. I find the majority, in place of leaving the growing to cool, practical, experienced growers, try methods which they think may be right, or listen to the advice of amateurs. This interferes with the success of their growers and, when failure inevitably results, place the blame upon the grower.

The greater number of those in business through this country just fell into the business naturally and have gradually worked up with their business and made money enough to spread out and are nearly all more successful than one would think.

What few roses have been planted as an experiment are showing the effects of the rainy weather. But my first impression that they can be successfully grown here has not changed. At some future time I will write the method employed.

Bulbous stock is nearly all gone; there will not be any for Easter. Harrisii will be in all right. Azaleas are coming in fast and there will not be many left.

Green carnations were a novelty here St. Patrick's day, no one here having ever seen the doctored article before, and what had been prepared went readily at $1.25 per dozen. Bedding stock is looking well and the wish is that it may clear up so that planting may commence.

We understand that Mr. Majors, grower for Munson, at Denison, will take charge of the growing for the Texas Nursery Co., of Sherman, May 1. They contemplate erecting one or more houses to grow carnations.

J. S. Kerr, the popular nurseryman of Sherman, was called away suddenly to Butte, Mont., on account of the serious illness of his son, who is there.

Mrs. H. O. Hannah & Son, of Sherman, had the monopoly of the green carnation business St. Patrick's day and reaped a small harvest. NARCISSUS.

ROCHESTER.

Current Comment.

French, Dutch and Japanese goods make a splendid showing now, and with a few days of sunny weather we have an idea that at Easter we will have a chance to regain some of the Lenten losses and come out even, or better.

Mr. Oviatt has quite a place here with a good assortment of stock of flowering and foliage plants. Bedding plants are given their share of space and sweet peas are grown in quantity. All appear to be in good shape.

For some time past J. B. Keller Sons have been more or less mentally and financially disturbed by the disappearance of their stock. Determined to discover the leakage, a burglar alarm was attached to the carnation house entrance. Returning home rather late (or, perhaps, somewhat early) from a meeting of convivial friends (we have no Florists' Club here), the bell rang, and George Keller knew that something was wrong. Armed with revolver, rifle and bowie knife, George rushed out to find a woman crouching beneath a bench. Far be it from us to detract from George's pluck, but we must say that the lady has been judged irresponsible. As she had omitted to complete her toilet before making her selection of carnations, naturally Mr. Keller was much embarrassed.

Our commission man reports satisfactory trade and prophecies good business for Easter. Sweet peas, daffodils, etc., while in first-class condition, have not yielded the best cash results. Bermuda lilies have been bringing 12 to 15 cents, and, as a rule, the quality is good.

Salter Bros. have some original make-ups in their store, which have caused quite a good deal of interest, and the other local dealers report brisk business.

Small azaleas have proven a paying proposition, and altogether there seems a more hopeful feeling throughout the trade. F. S. P.

ELGIN, ILL.—Fred Plagge was called to Turtle Lake, Wis., March 27, by the death of his sister, Mrs. John Busch. Mr. Busch, husband of the deceased, was a florist in this city for a number of years.

My subscription expires April 20, and I renew it now, as I do not wish to miss a copy. I have learned more from the REVIEW than from any other paper. Everyone in the trade should read it. You may publish this if you want to, for it is just and true.—JACOB H. LINKEY, Mountville, Pa.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—The Illinois State Horticultural Society, to promote the more general observance of Arbor day, recommends the planting of some tree, plant or seeds by every school district, with appropriate exercises by the pupils, as a proper observance of the day. It would also request individual planters generally, so far as it may be convenient, to give preference to Arbor day for their annual planting, to the end that the great state of Illinois shall with one accord join in making this one of the notable days of the year in a work of economy, wealth and beauty.

NOTICE

Because of the new wage scale which the Printers' Union has enforced upon those employers not willing to suffer interruption of their business, especially because of that part of the scale which makes overtime practically prohibitive, it is of first importance that the Review obtain its advertising "copy" earlier.

It is therefore earnestly requested that all advertisers mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday or Tuesday morning, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

Contributors also please take heed.

W. P. KASTING writes, after the first forms had gone to press, that the words "somewhat heavier" after Cut Lilies in his advertisement of March 29, which appears again this week, apply to the kind of type he wanted the words printed with and not to the lilies themselves. He says his supply of lilies this year is more than "somewhat" heavier.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market took a brace in the later days of last week and by Saturday had a quite vigorous tone. Monday opened good, but hardly as strong as Saturday. By Wednesday a glut had developed, but there is a prospect of fair activity between now and Easter. The shipping business does not show much increase, but local trade is more active since we have had a return to pleasant weather.

Roses had not stiffened in price to so great a degree as other items in the market. There are no very heavy supplies of Beauties, but an abundance of other roses. The cold weather and a few days of bright sun have served to give the roses a quality unusual at this season. All the stock is crisp and firm and travels well. The average quality of most growers' cuts is exceptionally good. The spring crops of Liberty appear to be coming on. Chatenay is also more in evidence than in the past few weeks. Uncle John is especially good. Some early crops of Kaiserin are at hand.

The spring crop of carnations is on and the quality is exceptionally good in all varieties. The weather has been ideal for the production of first grade carnations. On Friday and Saturday the market advanced sharply with a slight increase in the demand, because the growers are already beginning the process of accumulating the supply for Easter. There continue to be receipts of Lawson almost, if not quite, equal to the combined receipts of other varieties. Enchantress is not quite so plentiful as it was a while ago.

Saturday the violet market had unexpected strength. At the beginning of last week it was almost impossible to get rid of the violets at any price, but by Saturday they were first-class property. The receipts are somewhat lighter than usual and the demand heavier. The local singles are about done for. The miscellaneous items, including Easter lilies, callas and all varieties of bulbous stock, are in lighter supply than heretofore, as the growers are holding them for Easter wherever possible. Some very fine sweet peas are now seen.

Smilax is quite scarce and the advance in price has had a tendency to turn the demand toward asparagus. There is an abundance of all other greens, including common ferns, which usually begin to grow scarcer at this season.

The Easter Prospect.

Without exception the wholesalers are counting on the largest Easter demand in history. The volume of business is steadily increasing in this market and a great many early inquiries have been received for very large quantities of stock. The prospect is that there will be an abundance of Easter lilies but that quite a proportion of them will be of indifferent quality. On roses there are varying reports. A few growers state that they will be at the height of their crops but others report crops going off. The carnation plants seem at their prime, with every prospect of large supplies. But the carnation is now the most popular flower and there will be no surplus. Reports from Rhinebeck are to the effect that there will be violets to burn, and doubtless some will deserve no better fate, but the good ones will all sell at a first-class price. The storing-up process is apparently in progress all along the line.

Easter Plants.

There are more plants ready for Easter than in any previous year. The single exception to this may be tulips, hyacinths and daffodils. While there are considerable quantities of these, they are no more plentiful than last year. Lilies which are too short to sell well cut are plentiful. There are many azaleas; good ones, but quite a few are earlier than they should be. Some fine hydrangeas are offered, also Crimson Rambler, Baby Rambler and hybrid roses. These are the staples and the novelties are few and far between.

Various Notes.

Wm. Collatz, of Maywood, has bought the material for another house 15x200 for carnations.

Frank Schramm, of Arlington Heights, went fishing early Monday morning and with his day's consignment to Kennicott's sent E. E. Pieser a nine-pound pickerel still living.

On Monday the Chicago Rose Co. received a car load of box trees.

J. A. Budlong has been cutting steadily of Brides and Maids all season. If anything, the crop is now on the increase.

L. Coatsworth has gone to New Castle to begin work on the new greenhouses. They are having a splendid cut of very fine quality and the demand makes them anxious to get their new houses up and planted in season for an early crop next fall.

J. B. Deamud Co. is handling some hydrangeas that are remarkable for the size of the trusses of flowers. They also have some good stock in other lines.

Zech & Mann say that they expect their Easter crops of carnations of the varieties producing the ordinary grades to be something entirely unprecedented.

Wieland & Risch report that the demand for plants of Killarney has been so great that they have let go of small lots of stock until they now have only enough for planting six of their new houses. They had intended to give all of them to this variety.

Last Saturday O. P. Bassett celebrated his seventy-first birthday anniversary.

George Reinberg's Christmas specialty was American Beauty, his Easter specialty is American Beauty and his Decoration day specialty will be American Beauty.

Bassett & Washburn are well pleased with their lilies from bulbs grown in the Azores islands.

Easter chicks and ducklings are reported by C. W. McKellar as selling well in spite of the fact that this line, like paper Christmas bells, encounters department store competition.

Isadore Goldstein, an aged florist, some years retired, was down town March 28 when his memory failed. The police returned him to his home on the west side.

At E. H. Hunt's the force in the supply department is repeating the Christmas "stunt," shipping birch bark ware, twig goods and other Easter specialties.

Lubliner & Trinz say business at their Randolph street store is two or three times as heavy as a year ago at this time.

Last year at Easter ferns were worth fifty per cent more than they will be a week hence.

Several of the commission houses are handling pot plants for Easter. Vaughan & Sperry are showing samples of pot roses in nice shape, well flowered hydrangeas, etc.

At Tuesday's election Peter Reinberg was returned to the city council by a good, safe plurality. It was a notable victory, as the I. M. O. city administration influence and the saloons were all against him. The Tribune says it was a mark of the confidence in him felt by the people of the ward.

On Tuesday the show house of the George Wittbold Co. was turned into an election polling place. The precinct rolled up a good plurality for Peter Reinberg.

Wietor Bros. anticipate for Easter the largest rose crops in their history, with Kaiserin especially heavy.

At about this time each year smilax becomes scarce, but E. C. Ameling says that asparagus can be depended on to do business every day in the year.

Stollery Bros. have several thousands of fancy tulips to be ready in the next ten days. They have not grown many of the finer sorts this year, as they find $5 per hundred the limit the market will pay, and more money is to be made forcing cheaper bulbs to sell at $3.

A. L. Randall says that the new supply department is helping the cut flowers, and vice versa. People who order from one end of the store take something from the other. He is well pleased with the Easter business in supplies.

E. F. Winterson says he is very well pleased with the past week and that he looks for a good market right along now. It was only "off" for a short time.

Sinner Bros. certainly know what to feed the callas with; they get the flower and stem.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. has had a busy week. Their cut was heavy, and when

With the single exception of the year 1900, March was colder than the weather bureau records it since 1877. The mean temperature for the month was 30 degrees, 9 degrees colder than last year. There were only six clear days.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The increase in the quantity of fine Kaiserin roses is a feature of the market this week. Unfortunately, they are very poor stock at present, good Brides being taken in preference. It is hoped, however, that next week's demand for white flowers will create sufficient business for all the roses of both varieties at satisfactory prices.

Business has not been up to the mark during the past few days. Saturday saw a brisk demand, but the accumulations of the previous days were scattered all along Market street at ridiculous prices. The meeting of city councils on Monday, generally a great floral affair, was not equal to previous years. Very few new members took their seats. The flowers sent were not allowed on the desks, a new ruling, but were placed in an adjoining room, as at Washington last December. This departure will undoubtedly edly to a great extent destroy the business in floral offerings.

The indications point to a moderate supply of carnations, a scarcity in good smilax, a heavy supply of well-grown cut lilies, American Beauties, Kaiserins and possibly Brides and Maids. On these last two items there is a difference of opinion. Good violets will be fairly plentiful, provided cool weather continues. So, also, will pansies. Sweet peas do not seem very plentiful. Prices are lower now than is usual before Easter, but the indications point to last Easter's prices being realized on most lines of stock of good quality.

A Wedding of Interest.

A wedding of far more than local interest occurred in this city on Thursday, March 29, when M. Rice was married to Mrs. Emma Wolff Young. The marriage was a home affair, only the immediate families and a few of Mr. Rice's most intimate friends being present. The happy couple sailed for Europe last Saturday on the Pretoria for an extended wedding trip. They will visit France, Germany, Switzerland and Italy. So quietly were the arrangements made that only a very few of the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Rice were able to express their good wishes by sending gifts. B. Eschner and E. Weiss were among the few who waved farewell from the pier.

Easter Novelties.

A hurried glance over the array of Easter plants for next week's business shows a few novelties of more than ordinary merit. First among these, Baby Rambler rose may fairly take its place. Though in its second year, it is practically a novelty, as only a few were bought last season. Next to the Baby comes Dorothy Perkins, a rose of tried merit outdoors, but the forcing qualities of which have yet to be tested. Marguerite Queen Alexandra seems promising. The flowers are large and very striking. But perhaps the most interesting, and certainly the truest novelty is Rhododendron Pink Pearl, a beautiful soft pink, flowers very large and full. This variety was imported by Henry A. Dreer and by him turned over to Jacob Becker, of West Philadelphia, who is forcing it now and for Easter. Mr. Becker thinks very highly of the new claimant for popular favor and believes that it is beyond doubt the most beautiful rhododendron in this country today. It is said to be perfectly hardy.

A New Departure.

The committee in charge of the April meeting of the Germantown Horticultural Society has arranged a program which may be of interest to other societies which find it difficult to sustain an animated discussion on a given topic. The plan as originally mapped out is given below for what it is worth.

Subject: Flowering Shrubs. Introductory talk, S. Mendelson Meehan (5 minutes); Old Fashioned Garden Shrubs, N. Dubois Miller (15 minutes); Attractive Arrangement of Shrubs, Leonard Morse (8 minutes); Evergreen Shrubs, Wm. Warner Harper (5 minutes); Winter Effects from Berried Shrubs and Colored Barks, R. B. Cridland (5 minutes); Planting, Care and Pruning, J. Howes Humphreys (8 minutes); Forcing Shrubs, John Welsh Young (5 minutes).

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co. will be especially strong on Kaiserins for Easter. Their orders for Easter plants exceed those of last year at this time.

Samuel S. Pennock has his samples of Easter plants on exhibition in his new annex.

Paul Berkowitz, of A. Bayersdorfer & Co., has returned from a most successful pre-Easter trip.

Mr. and Mrs. William Blacker, of Clearfield, Pa., were in this city a few days ago, looking up Easter stock.

Miss Dundore, buyer for H. Shroyer, Lancaster, Pa., was in town looking up Easter supplies.

PACKING SUMMER FLOWERS.

The first step toward the successful shipment of asters, dahlias, gladioli, peonies and sweet peas would be to cut them early in the morning, and to put them in water at once, keeping them in a cool cellar until time to pack them for shipment, says W. H. Taplin in answer to a query by a reader of the Rural New Yorker. When packing either of the first four flowers mentioned it is best to use shallow boxes similar to those used for packing long-stemmed roses, and to pack them closely in regular order, the boxes being well lined with newspapers first and over these some wax paper. If the weather is very warm and the flowers are to be sent a considerable distance, some cracked ice may be sprinkled among the stems of the flowers, though keeping the ice away from the blooms with some wax paper.

Any long-stemmed flowers that are to be sent by express are safer with a light cleat pressed down on the stems and nailed in place, this precaution often saving the flowers from bruising when roughly handled.

Asters and dahlias should be almost fully developed when they are cut, as they do not advance so much in water as the gladioli and peonies, the latter being cut when not much more than half open, and in very warm weather when the buds are just bursting. Sweet peas are not specially good keepers in warm weather, and the sprays should be cut when the first flower is open, if they are intended for shipment, and the flowers should not be sprinkled, else they will soon drop. Some of the dahlias, and especially some of the cactus varieties, do not keep very well when cut, but all are benefited by being placed in buckets of water for a few hours before shipment, it being an advantage for long-stemmed flowers to be placed in deep vessels, so that the stems are immersed to a considerable depth, and in common with all cut flowers, they should be kept in the shade and in as cool a place as possible.

To my way of thinking, by all odds the best paper.—H. L. CLAPP, Ripon, Wis.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at Toledo, O., June 26-28, 1906.

THE department stores are getting their seed outfits ready for the spring rush.

J. OGDEN ARMOUR states that this year 2,500 is the acreage of cantaloupes in the Salton "desert" of California.

It develops that the "wholesale" seed house looking for a high priced man for the mail trade is Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago.

W. W. RAWSON & Co., Boston, will again be ready for business at the old stand in a very few days. Since their fire, work on restoring the structure has been rushed.

It is said that the "Seroco" and the other new brand of garden seeds are getting a wide distribution. There is no room for complaint here, however, as the distribution of neither is free.

ONION set men say that the market is likely to close in good order. The quantity available is below the average needs of the season and no disturbance or lowering of prices is looked for.

THE seed imports at the port of New York last week were 3,121 bags of clover, valued at $74,340 in the invoices; 400 bags grass seeds, valued at $7,798, and miscellaneous seeds valued at $2,695.

MAIL advices from California growers, dated in the last days of March, reported heavy rains, with a possibility rapidly becoming a probability that damage would be done crops growing for seed.

A COUNTRY editor says that there never has been a greater farce than the government free seeds since Horace Greeley advocated the distribution of hydraulic rams to sheep breeders for the improvement of their flocks.

THE Capital Seed Co., Des Moines, Ia., filed a schedule in voluntary bankruptcy March 28. The liabilities are listed at $2,744.99, with assets of $1,591.20. Of the latter $1,500 is stock in trade. The company consists of Charles E. Rogers and George A. Taylor.

FROM Southern Illinois and sections in that latitude east and west come reports of poor planting weather: Roads impassable, fields wet, little spring farm work done and things generally at a standstill. Merchants are waiting for the seed selling season to open and are not overconfident that the volume in this branch of their business will equal last year's.

REPORTS in general for the week show that trade is well up to the average. Grass and field seed are in better demand. "Fill in" orders for garden seeds, which up to the present have not reached the volume they should, are coming in fairly well. Market garden trade is exceptionally good and the outlook for retail counter trade is quite satisfactory.

VISITED CHICAGO: Lowell Emerson, president of the Western Seed and Irrigation Co.

CHICAGO:—At this date last year quite an acreage for onion sets and other crops had been planted. So far this year not an acre is sown. This does not prove the present spring late, but it shows how different one year is from another, and how hard it is to feel certain that this year's trade is better or worse than last year's until all the returns are in.

MADISON, S. D.—A seed company, with capital of $25,000, has been organized here. Those interested in the enterprise are O. S. Jones, George Farmer, Harvey Jones, Dr. Clough, Dr. Trudenberg, George Irish, M. E. Hart, Albert Wedgewood and Frank Fuller. The company will have the O. S. Jones farm at Lake Herman. The chief purpose of the corporation will be the growing and sale of seeds, though the breeding of hogs and chickens will be undertaken as side lines. A greenhouse will be established.

THAT TRADE-MARK BILL.

I have read very carefully the proof of the bill recently introduced into Congress for the purpose of affording protection to the introducers of horticultural novelties, and must say most emphatically it is not feasible.

In common with all other introducers of novelties I have often felt need of some protection, but I have never yet been able to frame in my own mind how this could be done by the government without working injury to the general horticultural and agricultural interests of the country.

Suppose such a bill should become a law and the introducer of the novelty

NEW ESCHSCHOLTZIAS.

In the REVIEW of March 1, we notice under the heading of "Novelties," you have an extract from the "Horticultural Advertiser" as follows:

The additions among annuals are very few, but three good things obtained recognition, Eschscholtzia Carmine King, etc.

It struck us we would like to give you a little information and a few facts concerning this, we believe, very interesting eschscholtzia. Some years ago we introduced a new class of eschscholtzia, which we called erecta compacta, and which is much more compact in habit than the ordinary rambling variety. Out of this erecta compacta type we have also much improved the colors, and introduced a rich, deep orange scarlet which we called erecta compacta Mandarin, and also a rose-colored one which we called Rose Queen, some five or six years ago. Then out of this Rose Queen, the year before last we introduced one which we called erecta compacta Intus Rosea, which is not only of a richer rose color, but has the color inside the flower as well as outside, and strange to say this last season this same novelty has been introduced both by Messrs. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., of Philadelphia, under the name of Burbank's Crimson Flowering, and by Messrs. Carter & Co., of London, under the name of Carmine King.

ANYONE CAN GROW

The Improved Countess of Lonsdale Dahlia

This is by far the most handsome and useful Dahlia of the Cactus type introduced to date. The flowers are large and the color is intense crimson scarlet, lighting up beautifully at night. The flowers, very large, are borne on tall, stiff, erect stems and their profusion is extraordinary. Among the many Dahlia Blooms shipped into the New York Wholesale Market none are more popular with the Retail Florist than the IMPROVED COUNTESS OF LONSDALE. Strong divided field-grown roots. Price—6 for $1.00; $1.75 per doz.; $12.00 per 100.

We have not been able to compare them yet, but we think there can be no doubt about it, as nature has only one way of reproducing itself in a particular class of flower, and this novelty of having the color as deep, or nearly as deep, on the inside as on the outside was noticed by us a year before the other two firms announced it. We thought it might interest you to know this, and if you have the means of trying these two varieties, we should like you to test them, or send them to some one to test. We are therefore enclosing a packet of our Intus Rosea and two sealed packets of Carter's Carmine King, which we have secured for the purpose, and if you are interested, perhaps you will kindly get a packet of Burbank's Crimson Flowering from Messrs. Burpee & Co.

MR. MAULE ON ADVERTISING.

Wm. Henry Maule, of Philadelphia, contributes the following to White's Class Advertising:

From my own experience, and the experience of others in my line of business, I can say that the better papers of the agricultural press are making better returns than ever before in their history. In fact, most of the seedsmen and other large advertisers with whom I am acquainted, tell me that the agricultural press is producing for them the best returns of any class publications.

A number of us the last three or four years switched a considerable amount of our appropriation to the mail order journals; but I find this year the money is being spent in the strictly agricultural papers, for the reason that while the mail order journals produce an immense amount of inquiries for catalogues, they do not produce anything like the proportion of sales they should. On comparison, a thousand inquiries from the strictly mail order journals has resulted in less than fifty orders, large and small, whereas the same number of inquiries from the better class of agricultural publications has produced in some cases a customer for every three queries. This speaks for itself.

If you have a cut rate offer to make, and are anxious to sell your seeds or other goods at half price, possibly the mail order journals are the

Eckford's Unique New Sweet Pea

HENRY ECKFORD

This extremely handsome and distinct flower has caused great excitement amongst lovers of the Sweet Pea. Perfection in shape and size and unique in color it is needless to say that it has received recognition wherever shown.

Mr. Eckford writes—and we agree with him. “I will venture the following description as to color: an intense bright shining Orange self, quite unique and absolutely distinct.” Its three flowers are borne on long stout stems and beautifully placed, making an ideal buttonhole flower.

The plant is wonderfully free flowering, robust, vigorous in growth and spreading, and should be allowed at least eighteen inches between each plant. The stock is limited. In Eckford's original sealed packets (10 seeds). Per pkt. 65c. (2s. 6d.) net.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA

This is an intense scarlet self of grand texture,—a bold expanded flower of finest form. The plant is robust and must be given plenty of room,—eighteen inches between each plant is not too much. It is very free flowering and the flowers are of giant size with long strong stems. This grand flower does not burn in the sun, an advantage of no mean value. This and Henry Eckford are absolutely indispensable for exhibition. In Eckford's Original Sealed Packets (10 seeds). Per pkt. 65c. (2s. 6d.) net.

SYBIL ECKFORD

This is not a large flower but well expanded, and frequently bears four flowers on its long strong stems. The principal merits are its color, robustness, free-flowering and decorative properties. The color gives an exquisite rich apricot and lemon effect, the standards being a delicate blush-pink shade on lemon ground; wings a delicate lemon, quite distinct and charming. In Eckford's Original Sealed Packets (15 seeds). Per pkt. 25c.

NET. Please note that our usual discount on “seeds in packets” does not apply to these original Eckfords. $1.25 will buy both Henry Eckford and Queen Alexandra, while with Sybil Eckford the set will cost $1.50.

For other Sweet Peas and other florists' seeds see BURPEE'S “BLUE LIST” for 1906 which with our retail catalogue will be mailed free on application.

It certainly will pay florists to try one packet each of these three new Eckfords so as to learn of their great value when the seed can be had at a more moderate price next season.

best; but for a straight legitimate business proposition the agricultural press is undoubtedly, in my estimation, in a better position than ever before to produce satisfactory results. This applies especially to advertisers of seeds, implements, nursery stock, etc.

You asked for my candid opinion, and I have endeavored to give it to you. I can only supplement my remarks by saying that from all appearances this season promises to be by all odds the most profitable the seed trade has ever known. The farmers and gardeners of this country have any amount of money, and they are willing and ready to spend it for good goods.

PRIZETAKER ONION.

J. H. Bollinger, who says he has been growing Prizetaker onions in Ohio for over ten years, writes in the Rural New Yorker that he can sell large fine Prizetakers much easier at from 20 to 25 cents per bushel higher than medium size onions of the same, or other varieties. "I have offered them to dealers who told me they were overloaded with onions who would on seeing them buy as many as ten bushels at my own price. Last fall I put off some at a store at $1 per bushel; when a man drove up loaded with nice Yellow Globe Danvers, offering them at 65 cents, he was only able to sell a few." His best yield has not been over 800 bushels per acre. He recommends planting only such acreage as can be given the very best of care.

best; but for a straight legitimate business proposition the agricultural press is undoubtedly, in my estimation, in a better position than ever before to produce satisfactory results. This applies especially to advertisers of seeds, implements, nursery stock, etc.

You asked for my candid opinion, and I have endeavored to give it to you. I can only supplement my remarks by saying that from all appearances this season promises to be by all odds the most profitable the seed trade has ever known. The farmers and gardeners of this country have any amount of money, and they are willing and ready to spend it for good goods.

PRIZETAKER ONION.

J. H. Bollinger, who says he has been growing Prizetaker onions in Ohio for over ten years, writes in the Rural New Yorker that he can sell large fine Prizetakers much easier at from 20 to 25 cents per bushel higher than medium size onions of the same, or other varieties. "I have offered them to dealers who told me they were overloaded with onions who would on seeing them buy as many as ten bushels at my own price. Last fall I put off some at a store at $1 per bushel; when a man drove up loaded with nice Yellow Globe Danvers, offering them at 65 cents, he was only able to sell a few." His best yield has not been over 800 bushels per acre. He recommends planting only such acreage as can be given the very best of care.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

The last two weeks the weather has been characterized by a regular winter period, the coldest and sharpest we have had this winter; some 12 to 18 degrees of frost has been experienced in eastern counties and eight inches of snow has fallen in some parts. Much damage will result to many crops coming, as it has, after the recent mild and open weather.

The South Lincolnshire bulb fields are looking green and vigorous and will soon be covered with millions of narcissus blooms. The season for Lincolnshire cut flower trade will be somewhat earlier than usual this year and already growers are in full swing with the earliest sorts, such as Talemonius plenus, Obvolaris, etc. Lincolnshire may well be described as Holland in England, so far as daffodils and narcissi are concerned. The Lincolnshire growers, however, do not seem to have made much progress in tulip cultivation, and although some growers have prophesied that within a few years they would be able to compete with Holland, they do not appear able to do so, and fewer of the early forcing sorts of tulips are grown each year. Their cultivation is a losing business, with the exception of some May flowering sorts, notably the beautiful yellow Bouton d'Or. This lovely tulip does exceptionally well in Lincolnshire, probably better than in Holland, always flowering well and increasing rapidly.

The building boom (I think the immense quantity of glass now in course of erection can be called a boom) continues apace, and one wonders where all the product of these extra houses is going to in the future. The population of the British Isles is not increasing at a very rapid rate, but it will be an easy matter to increase the demand if growers will also cheapen the cost of production of fruits, etc., so that the retail price of grapes, tomatoes, cucumbers, etc., will be sufficiently low to place them within reach of the great masses of poor people in the large manufacturing centers. There will be no difficulty in doubling the consumption of such goods in the United Kingdom if prices go lower and, as stated in some of my previous notes, it is the aim of the English growers generally, not to obtain a higher price, but to cheapen production in all sections under cultivation.

Many people engaged in picking and working in cut narcissi and daffodils are complaining of the poisonous nature of the sap contained in the stalks. After a few days' work it causes the skin to slough from the fingers with much smarting and irritation. In extreme cases the finger nails have been known to peel away and it is often several weeks after work in the blooms is discontinued before the disorder disappears. A good coating of grease put on the hands especially under and around the nails, before commencing work each day, is said to serve as a preventive. Glycerine, also, is recommended.

Traveling in Cheshire the other day I came across an immense quantity of tulips and narcissi grown in cold frames. They were perfection, both in quality of bloom and in health and vigor of growth. My past experience in this method of culture is that the blooms are usually too weak and poorly colored to make them a success, but this lot was particularly strong and deeply colored.

The grower informed me the way to grow them perfect was to have the frames very shallow and not to put over the lights until well after Christmas. The bulbs, he said, should make a full root action before covering. Plenty of air was required during the slightest sunshine, and particular care should be taken to have very strong bulbs. No artificial heat was used, the only forcing, if it could be called forcing, being done by watering with tepid water. This is a profitable and easy method of cultivation to get bulb stock ten days earlier than outdoor grown, and one also that leaves the bulbs as healthy and strong as when grown in the open.

WASHINGTON.

Comment.

The cut flower trade is slow, excepting spring flowers, which move freely. Though the large entertainments of the season are over, there is yet considerable entertaining in official circles, which will continue till Congress adjourns. As all these events call for more or less decorative work, it can be readily seen that the florists are "friendly" to Congress.

Just now everybody is taking the breathing spell necessary to get up pressure for the strenuous work of Easter. Though there has been considerable dark weather, stock seems to be coming on fast, some of it too fast, as it is coming on the market now and has a depressing effect. For good stock the following prices rule, at retail: American Beauty

CUT IT OUT.

Advertisers are urged to cut out of their advertisements in the REVIEW any items of stock on which they are running low. Remember that the REVIEW is printed every Wednesday. Write so that your letter will be received on Tuesday, directing that items nearly sold out be omitted. Don't wait until you are completely sold out; orders will keep coming. Don't neglect it. You will be at no greater trouble to change your advertisement in the REVIEW than you will be to send back money—besides, you know how it would disappoint you to order stock and a week or so later, instead of getting the goods, have the money returned. Then, if the same stock is listed in the advertisement in the next REVIEW, what would you think? Cut it out!

WE will have to ask you to discontinue our advertisement of roses until further notice, to allow us to catch up with our orders.—S. J. REUTER, Westerly, R. I.

PACIFIC COAST.

PUYALLUP, WASH.—Mrs. Mary E. Hayden, a Tacoma florist, has purchased a tract of thirty-six acres, lying northwest of this city. The purchase price was $8,000.

THE legislature of California has passed an act making it a crime for a nurseryman or other person to sell or dispose of any fruit tree which has not been properly labeled as to the variety.

POTTED PLANTS IN THE SHOP.

How far the retail dealer in cut flowers in San Francisco should bother himself with potted plants in his store is always a puzzling question, and whether they pay for the trouble they cause will also give food for reflection.

In the first place, whenever the retailer keeps a few plants on hand, they invariably attract the attention of "shoppers" and much time is often consumed in an effort to make a sale. When the purchaser finally decides to take something, the florist invariably has to agree to take the plant back in case it does not grow as well as is expected. Of course it is hardly necessary to say in this case that the plant is sick "nigh unto death" in about two weeks or less and the lady brings it back and the usual conversation takes place:

"I bought this plant here only a week ago and it looks as if it were going to die. You told me in case it did not do well to bring it back and you would give me something else." The florist takes it in hand and discovers that it has been standing in a jardiniere half full of water all that time and it was surprising that it looked as well as it did. Of course, several of the sprays have been cut off and the poor florist puts it under the counter until some wholesale man comes around and takes it back to the nursery. In the meanwhile the lady comes back and after exaggerating the price paid previously selects something else instead, remarking that she will keep this plant in any event.

Well kept ferns, palms and flowering plants greatly enhance the beauty of a floral establishment and are in good keeping with the business. If the retailer has a greenhouse in connection with his store he can, of course, handle them to much better advantage and keep them in better shape. If not, he should make arrangements with a grower to give him a change of stock at least once a week. In this way the plants do not suffer as much as to keep them until they become too shabby to sell, either from the change of atmosphere or carelessness in handling.

Florists' helpers are usually very careless in regard to potted plants. They usually forget to water them until their attention is called by some customer to the fact that the plants need water; or else they nip off any extra nice shoots, if the plant is a fern, and if a flowering plant the blooms generally disappear in some way, all of which is rather annoying to the owner.

For special occasions it is, of course, necessary to make a good showing of potted plants in bloom and particular pains must be put forth. All stock, however, remaining after that date should be returned to the nursery and given a chance to recuperate.

Unless a florist makes a specialty of potted plants, and has greenhouse facilities for handling them, he will do much better not to buy them outright, but to get stock that may be changed each week, if necessary, thereby always keeping up a good show.

Everyone knows how long a delicate fern, palm or flowering plant lasts in a store, and the least attractive feature can be made one of the best paying if handled rightly.

PORTLAND, ORE.

We are still occupying the same position on the map though growing and expanding with the prosperity of the country. And we are going right ahead and everybody busy. Trade has been remarkable for two months, the Lenten season making no perceptible difference in the general sale of flowers. Funeral work has been a big item, while the social life demanded and was willing to pay for the best in the market. With the exception of a short cold snap in the early part of March, which made poor robin hop to the barn, we have been favored with ideal spring weather; flowers of all kinds are plentiful but not in oversupply. The bright sunshine hastened along outside bulbous stock which is so popular here for decorative work. Everything in this line has sold well and profitably this year. Too much cannot be said of the quality of roses and carnations, for they are simply grand and our one hope is that they may hold to their present standard of excellence until after Easter. Lilies, too, are looking fine and will be on hand when we want them. We are safe in predicting a big Easter trade, as there will be little competition out of doors on account of the late heavy frosts.

Gardening and early planting have begun in earnest and the lawn mower is again being pressed into service. We can hardly expect to eclipse last year's sales in this line, when every resident planted a bed of roses in honor of Lewis and Clark. But the fence is still prevalent and undoubtedly all the dealers will be satisfied at the close of the season.

Clarke Bros. have made this a prominent branch of their business for a number of years and annually distribute 25,000 retail catalogues through the northwest states, British Columbia and, recently, in Alaska.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business continues to be very quiet, due both to the season and the weather. Flowers are coming into town much faster than they are being disposed of by the retailers and as a consequence considerable stock remains unsold.

Carnations have fallen a little in price and the best of the fancy sorts can now be had at three dozen for $1. Second quality are selling at 25 cents per dozen.

Roses, except fancy Beauties, move very slowly and it is fortunate that only a limited quantity are shipped into this market.

Violets are out of season again and we will see little more of them until next winter. Tulips of the late blooming varieties sell well. They cost the retailers from 35 cents to 50 cents per dozen. All varieties of narcissi and daffodils are on the wane and only a few of the spring flowering varieties are seen.

Regarding prospects for Easter trade: Several dealers have made mention of the fact that there seems to be a scarcity of orders from the country thus far. Many retailers cater to the out-of-town trade and it is probable in a week or two they may have a more pleasant tale to tell.

It is certain there will be an abundance of flowers of every description in any event.

Various Notes.

A visit to the greenhouses of Sievers & Co. shows a big stock of young pelargoniums in small pots in healthy condition. This firm makes a specialty of this stock and devotes an entire house to its culture.

J. P. Nissen is replanting sidewalk trees in the town of Berkeley, where, for some reason, the stock planted last season has died out.

The Society Hortensia, of Alameda county, had its regular meeting on Saturday night last. A spring flower and bulb show is in contemplation.

H. H. Lilienthal, until recently editor of the Pacific Coast Horticulturist, is at present engaged in landscape work in Berkeley.

The report of the grand jury of Alameda county recently filed, called attention to "graft" in the furnishing of the county grounds with decorative plants and seeds.

Serveau Bros. are in line with a big stock of spring flowering plants. They have gained considerable reputation from the extra good line of pansies they are at present growing.

R. N. Critchlow is now located in Los Angeles. G.

DENVER.

The Market.

The market has been good the past week and business for March compares favorably with the corresponding month of last year. The weather has been good and the indications are that Easter trade will be first class.

American Beauty roses are again coming into crop; some very fine long stems are now being cut and are easily disposed of. N. A. Benson, Ben Boldt and the Park Floral Co. are cutting perhaps the best in town. The retail price runs from $3 to $8 per dozen.

Brides and Maids are now coming in larger quantities and quality excellent. The best grades hold their value, but the shorter stock does not move so well. Red roses are also plentiful, both Richmond and Liberty, and sell fairly well. Chatenay is also of excellent quality.

Carnations go around, with fairly active business. A low limit was set by one of the department stores last Saturday, selling at 35 cents per dozen, but the stock was not of fancy quality.

Easter lilies are coming in, but some are small and poor, as was evidenced by one of the department stores selling them at 17 cents per bloom retail, which perhaps were all they were worth. There are varying opinions as to what the Easter supply will be. Some report that their lilies will be lovely, and others say that they are not going to make it in time without hard forcing. It looks as though there would be plenty of lilies of low quality, but none too many of good grade. Only three large lots are in sight.

Violets are plentiful and will be for Easter, unless the weather should put a damper on them. Growers say there will be enough for all purposes at 50 and 75 cents. Bulbous stock has sold well and will be popular for the Easter trade, at medium prices.

Blooming roses will be among the best Easter sellers, and one of the leaders will undoubtedly be the Baby Rambler, of which quite a few are seen at the large shops.

Various Notes.

The Alpha Floral Co. will have a branch store for Easter trade in the old Glenarm hotel building.

It is reported that Elitch's Garden greenhouses are contemplating putting up 25,000 feet more glass the coming season.

Philip Scott is receiving some of the best sweet peas seen in the market, long stems and uniform size. E. S. K.

FT. SCOTT, KAN.—E. H. Smith has gone to Wausau, Wis., on business connected with an estate. He will be absent about a week.

ALGONA, IA.—At a meeting of the executive officers and directors of the Agricultural Society it was voted to authorize the erection of a floral hall for the county fair. It is proposed to put up a building 120x120, to cost, approximately, $3,500.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June 13-15, 1906.

BECHTEL'S pink double-flowering crab is spoken of as a tree of much merit.

COOPER & MONCRIEF, Winfield, Kan., grow annually over three million Catalpa speciosa.

NURSERYMEN are awaking to the fact that the florists are handling a very great deal of hardy material.

"Where do all the pins go?" It is no harder question than one relating to the disposition of the annual output of hardy roses.

NURSERYMEN are slowly learning that it pays to spray trees in nursery rows almost as well as it pays to spray them in the orchard.

HE who has not tried the new white rose, Frau Karl Druschki, need not lack for opportunity. It is included in the novelty list in practically every spring catalogue.

SECRETARY FREDERIC CRANFIELD, of the Wisconsin State Horticultural Society, has issued a bulletin, No. 8, which tells how to prune fruit trees and propagate by grafting.

THE nurseries about West Chester, Pa., have been holding forces of diggers for some weeks, awaiting weather which would permit getting out stock for spring shipment. Up to March 28 nothing could be done.

ORLANDO HARRISON, Berlin, Md., who is a member of the state legislature, proposes a law to compel railroads to pay for each day's delay when they do not furnish cars promptly, just as nurserymen are required to pay demurrage for not unloading.

THE Grand Rapids Nursery Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., has purchased and taken possession of the Kent County Commercial Nurseries located near Lowell. They will be conducted under their present name, but will be under the management of the Grand Rapids Nursery Co.'s local office.

MORE and more are the big wholesale nurseries, which have grown great on the production of fruit trees, turning their attention to shrubs and ornamental trees. Especially in the middle west is the demand for this class of stock becoming a strong factor in the business of the firms with the long lists of agents.

A STRIKING novelty in decorative trees is Prunus Pissardi Moseri flore pleno. Besides its foliage being of the bright purple color peculiar to that of the typical plant, the newcomer is rendered still more ornamental by the very pleasing pink color of its flowers, which are double and a little larger than those of P. Pissardi, somewhat resembling those of P. triloba. It was raised by Moser & Son, of Versailles, France, who state that the results from the trials made show that it will be a valuable addition to the list of plants useful for forcing and decoration.

THE fruit growers and nurserymen alike are still "roasting" the seedless apple.

FRANK E. GRAHAM, a former nurseryman at Boone, Ia., died at Indianola March 10.

THE Japanese maples are being largely used by a number of the leading landscape architects. They have a wide sale as single specimens for lawn planting.

THE Indiana Horticultural Society suggests a prize of $1,000 for a new apple "as good as Grimes' Golden and as prolific as Ben Davis!" He who furnishes such an apple will be well entitled to the money.

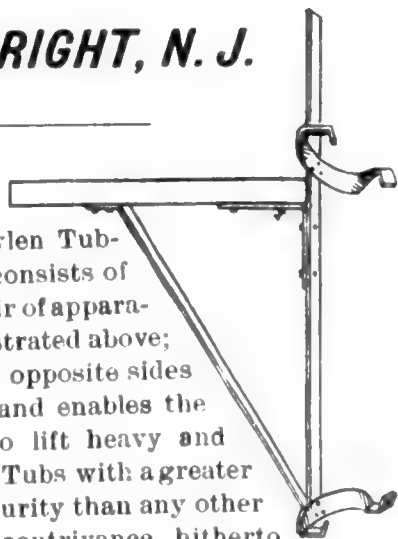

WITH mechanical tree diggers, mechanical balers and mechanical grafters the nursery business would be in danger of becoming a mechanical occupation were it not for the individuality retained by the state inspection laws regulating the shipment of nursery stock.

GIFFORD PINCHOT, U. S. Forester, is one of President Roosevelt's most frequent callers; in fact, he drops in whenever he passes that way. A press dispatch alleges that the doorkeepers at the White House kept cases on the tree planter and report him as having visited the president seventy-three times in one month.

DENVER, COLO.—An opinion announced by Attorney General N. C. Miller in substance says that owners of trees must kill insects attacking them. The opinion states that inspectors have full power under the law to compel owners of orchards, nurseries or trees infected with pests or diseases injurious to horticultural interests to take such measures as will remedy these conditions, either by spraying or other remedial agencies.

James Dowlen SEABRIGHT, N. J.

SCHOOL OF HORTICULTURE.

From a beautiful bulletin of the Iowa State Agricultural College we learn that the department of horticulture and forestry offers most excellent opportunities for observation and study. The department has a two-story laboratory for horticulture, containing the main laboratory for general instruction and research rooms for special students. The greenhouses, covering 5,000 square feet, offer every opportunity for studying the management of plants under glass. In addition to this, about forty acres of land are devoted to horticultural purposes, orchards, gardens and forestry plantations, thus enabling the students to make actual tests of the worth of different varieties, modes of culture and adaptability of soil and climate.

Instruction is also offered in the science of forestry—studying the production of timber for various purposes, the preservation of timber, lumbering operations and the general forest conditions of the country. Excellent opportunities are offered here for this study. Many varieties of both native and foreign trees are found on or near the campus, which, together with the large collection of specimens found in the museum, afford ample examples for study. The library, which is always at the disposal of the students, is also well supplied with literature relating to both horticulture and forestry.

THE CODLING MOTH.

The codling moth is familiar to every grower or consumer of apples, and a wormy apple, the result of its work, scarcely needs description. Such an apple is practically unsalable or, at best, fetches a very small price. The monetary loss thus occasioned by this insect is greater than that due to any other insect pest affecting fruits.

It has been shown by careful estimates in various apple-growing states that this insect may cause a loss of from twenty to forty per cent of the fruit which would otherwise be sound and merchantable. The U. S. Department of Agriculture estimates that this loss, on the lowest or twenty per cent basis, amounts annually to $11,400,000 in the United States, and this does not include the expenditures for spraying trees with arsenicals, which amount to more than $8,000,000 additional, indicating a total loss chargeable to the codling moth of nearly $20,000,000. Great as this loss still is, it has been very much limited by measures of control which are becoming more and more widely adopted, and many apple growers in badly infested regions are now saving every year more than eighty-five per cent of the fruit which would, without treatment, be wormy.

Spraying with some arsenical is now recognized as the best means of controlling the codling moth. The object is to poison the young larvæ before they enter the fruit. The larvæ get the poison while feeding on the leaves, or in the calyx, or on the sides of the fruit. Paris green is probably the best known of these arsenicals. It is a definite chemical compound of arsenic, copper, and acetic acid, and should have a uniform composition. It is a rather coarse powder, and has the fault of settling rapidly. It costs about 20 cents a pound. It may be prepared for spraying as follows:

Paris green.....pounds 1
Watergallons 150

The lime should be fresh and should be slaked in quantities as required. Mix the Paris green with a little water until a paste is formed, and then add this to the required amount of water, to which the lime has been added. A good average strength to use is one pound to 150 gallons, but it must be weaker on trees with delicate foliage.

SPRAYING WITH ACETYLENE.

Mention was made some months ago in the Journal of an apparatus used for spraying plants with a mixture of acetylene lime and copper compounds. The idea was to use this instead of the widely employed Bordeaux mixture familiar to horticulturists. The plan included the use of the natural pressure arising from the production of acetylene for forcing the liquid mixture on the plants. We have had accounts from Europe, also from South Africa, of the success of this, the Laurens, invention. Now we learn from the Algerian acetylene journal that this new spraying system has found extensive and successful employment in Algeria. The apparatus is said to be used at various agricultural stations, more especially in the places where the vine is cultivated. The apparatus is simply a portable closed cylinder filled with a solution of copper sulphate, a charge of carbide being brought into contact with the liquid when required to force the products of the chemical reactions out through a flexible pipe and jet.—Acetylene Journal.

INSECTICIDES.

Haslam's Insect Powder, an infallible insecticide. Destroys insects injurious to house and garden plants, shrubs, trees, vines, potatoes, melons, cabbage, currants, and vegetables and fruits of all kinds.

This preparation, though poisonous to insects, does not injure the foliage. It is used either by dusting or in water by spraying. Also destroys lice on fowls, cattle and dogs. Kills green fly on roses and other flowers, insects on quinces and pears. Insects that fly like flea beetles and rose bugs are more difficult to contend against than are caterpillars or slugs. Look often and dust or sprinkle when necessary.

Put up in 1-lb. boxes at 25c; 5 boxes for $1.00. Special prices in bulk.
Haslam Chemical Co., 118 Cliff St., Scranton, Pa.

Haslam's Lime Flour. For disinfecting, also for mixing with Paris green for dusting squab lofts and poultry houses. Sprinkle it freely about stables, kennels, cow sheds, pig sties, poultry houses, rabbit hutches, farm-yards, market places, factories, urinals, ash bins, etc. For disinfecting walls, ceilings, cattle trucks, and slaughter-houses, make the powder into a wash or milk by admixture with water and apply it in that form.

This is the purest and has the most strength of any lime made. Sure death to vermin and insects and superior to chloride of lime. No odor. Put up in bulk at 10c per lb.

LIME IN SOILS.

I would like to know if lime dressing of the soil before planting asters will kill insects or drive them away; also how to apply the lime, and in what quantity?
F. E. M.

I could have answered this query much more intelligently if you had stated the quality of your soil. The use of lime in agriculture is known to be an ancient practice. It is of greatest benefit on heavy muck soil, such as comprises the great prairie areas of Illinois, but often of no benefit to a sandy soil. I consider it of great help to carnations. We have a few acres of land twenty-five miles east of Buffalo that is full of lime. It came there during the glacial period, about a million years ago. The late Prof. John Fiske, of Harvard, in his beautiful little book, Through Nature to God, says there is indisputable evidence that man in a primitive form was on the earth and lived through it. Happy old man. He must have been chilly, but coal strikes didn't bother him. He was his own miner, tailor, cook, butcher and chauffeur and I'll bet he made his frau do all the snow shoveling and other hard work.

These large slabs of limestone were carried by the glacier on its journey southward from a neighboring ridge of solid limestone some ten miles north of us. As the glacier melted it dropped what it had collected as it scraped over the surface of the earth, leveling off the tops of small hills and gouging out valleys. A lump of ice a mile thick and of unknown length would have been irresistible, so in the course of ages, before Chicago was born, these lumps of ice became disintegrated and crumbled into fragments from pieces affording two cords of building stone to dust. The granite boulders in the same field remain intact, rounded only to a smooth surface by the countless rains and snows of the seasons. Such a quantity of lime in the soil is, I think, why we can grow good carnations without any very expert knowledge. Generally plants of higher order enjoy lime, and many of the districts of Europe would be unproductive without the help of lime, particularly the peaty soil of northern Germany.

Lime is used for two purposes. First, to release other plant food ingredients, and next, to lighten up the soil and make it more porous. We grow good carnations, but never noticed that asters were more than ordinary. While the great majority of the higher plants are benefited by lime, some exceptions occur. The erica family is not only injured but destroyed by lime.

My real, sober opinion is that a dressing of lime will be of benefit to a field of asters. It may destroy the larvæ of insects. The quantity is one ton of lime to an acre of ground. It should be composted with equal parts of muck or loam. That is the best way to apply it.

GUTTMAN & WEBER

43 WEST 28TH STREET and LYNBROOK, L. I.

New York, April 5, 1906.

TO CARNATION GROWERS EVERYWHERE:

Notwithstanding the phenomenal demand for Victory every day of the week since it was placed on sale, we are glad to tell you that we will have right along an abundance of cuttings sufficient to meet the demand, no matter how large it may become.

Victory's career has been a remarkable one. The highest honors have been accorded it wherever exhibited. It still stands pre-eminent among the Scarlet Carnations. No flower compares with it in the carnation family for its keeping qualities. A journey across the ocean found it in fresh condition upon arrival.

No Carnation is more prolific than Victory nor does any Carnation give you as large a flower. Blooms averaging three and a half inches.

A Victory plant has no surplus grass, every shoot means a flower. Victory comes in early and you want a Scarlet Carnation for Thanksgiving and Christmas trade.

A batch of strong cuttings from soil and pots up to three inches are now ready for delivery. Send your orders and you will not have to wait.

Prices: $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. 250 at the 1000 rate. Discount for cash with order.

Yours very truly,

GUTTMAN & WEBER.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

A peculiar week is what one must call the past seven days. The first three days business seemed at a standstill and the weather was acting its very worst; the wholesalers were about drowned out. The last three days things took a change for the better and a demand for stock came from almost everywhere. By Saturday night the wholesale houses were cleaned out of almost everything. Of course stock sold cheaply, but it is better to let it go at some price than go to the dump. Violets cleaned up much better, probably owing to the grand opera. On the whole, March of 1906 is reported to have been a better month than the corresponding period last year. This should afford some satisfaction.

Various Notes.

Tuesday night is club night. The subject is Easter flowers. President Jones has been around stirring up the boys, and it is certain the meeting will be a good one.

Blind Bros. had quite an elaborate decoration for the Jos. Horne Co., for its millinery opening.

Randolph & McClements were busy on funeral work the last of the week. Blankets of roses 8x10 feet are one of their specialties, and they seem to come pretty regularly.

Mrs. E. A. Williams is showing some novelties in plant arrangements for Easter which are bound to sell.

A. W. Smith had two very handsome windows this week, one of hydrangeas, the other of azaleas.

Walter Breitenstein, of Breitenstein & Flemm, was "down east" recently, and you will see the result in a day or two, as he usually gets something out of the ordinary and puts it out a few days before the holiday. As the buyers have not become tired looking at it, he gets top prices.

Wm. Schmidt, of Johnstown, Pa., has moved to a new location on Franklin street, where he will have better facilities for taking care of his growing trade.

Chal Peterson, of East Liverpool, O., is happy in having his new store ready for business.

Visitors: J. W. Dudley, Parkersburg, W. Va.; W. P. Craig, Philadelphia; John McLean, Youngstown, O.; Otto Miner, New Brighton, Pa.

Some People have taken our advice as published in these columns recently and are buying My Maryland for trial. We reiterate here—if it succeeds with you as it does with us, it will prove the best white carnation you ever grew. Despite the variety's apparent failure in several places, we strongly advise all growers to give it a trial. We have been frank about its faults as developed in other places. We doubt if these will develop in many places.

Jessica we believe, will succeed generally and will prove to be the best red and white variegated ever disseminated. Few varieties show as strong constitution as this one does and it is a wonderful producer. Extra fine stock of both varieties ready now. R. C., $2.50 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. Current Comment.

The weather and trade have both been dull for the past week, ending in another heavy fall of snow Friday night and Saturday morning. By noon Saturday, however, the sun was shining brightly and the snow fast disappearing, we all hope for the last time this season. We shall need all the sunshine we can get between now and Easter to help get some of those belated plants in.

Huntington & Page have opened a fine branch store in the big Traction Terminal building, in Illinois street. They will carry a full line of cut flowers and plants. Miss Truitt has charge of the floral department, while Miss Webb continues to preside at the main store in Market street.

Becoming disgusted with the weather and trade last week, Homer Wiegand shook the mud of Indianapolis off his feet and sampled that of the Kankakee swamps, looking for ducks. He returned all right and reports the "cooking" fine, also the ducks he didn't get.

John Rieman is about again after being confined to his house for ten days with rheumatic gout.

W. W. Coles and son, of Kokomo, visited the different greenhouses this week, looking for anything new in construction methods, etc. Mr. Coles is expecting to make a nice addition to his plant this summer.

Mart Nelson narrowly escaped being burned out a week ago, when the soot in his smoke stack caught fire, igniting the roof of his boiler shed. Fortunately his wife noticed it in time, and with the aid of a few bucketfuls of water extinguished the flames.

Carl Glaubke, of Malott Park, is going in extensively for truck gardening this year. He recently joined the noble army of benedicts and he has the good wishes of his many friends in both ventures.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.

The greenhouse industry in Springfield has already reached large proportions, and is assuming greater importance from year to year.

H. J. Koeppen was the first to start in Springfield. He began business in 1882 and has about 6,000 feet of glass.

Ed Quinn, of 440 New street, was the next one to make a venture in the florist line. He opened in 1883, a little less than one year later than Mr. Koeppen. Mr. Quinn has 8,000 feet of glass.

Charles and Fred Summerfield are proprietors of the Summerfield Floral Co., Florence and Division streets, where they began business about ten years ago. They now have over 30,000 feet of glass. In addition to their florists' output, the Summerfields raise about 1,000 baskets of lettuce and tomatoes each year. The Summerfield Floral Co. also has a small greenhouse and depot at Boonville and Sycamore streets.

W. A. Chalfant, who began business at 1328 Benton avenue in 1891, has 10,000 feet of glass and expects to increase the amount in the near future. Mr. Chalfant is propagating 20,000 carnations for next season.

The Springfield Seed Co.'s establishment is located at 737 Lincoln street and is under the management of William J. Shaffitzel. They have 2,400 feet of glass, used to test seeds, grow carnation and bedding plants.

There are two large wholesale seed houses in Springfield—the Planters' Seed Co. and the Springfield Seed Co. The amount of the garden seed handled by these two firms will amount to about 200 cars annually. The amount of grass and field seeds handled will reach nearly 400 cars each year.

The Springfield Seed Co. last year handled one car of incubators, twenty-five cars of berry crates and five cars of bee hives.

The Planters' Seed Co., John T. Stinson president and Frank W. Maas secretary, began business a little over one year ago on West Walnut street.

NEW LONDON, IOWA.—J. W. Fye, proprietor of Fairview fruit farm, is contemplating the erection of greenhouses.

PITTSBURG, KAN.—Last fall T. J. Wright put up two new houses, each 21x123, one for carnations, the other for roses. The stock in each is in fine shape, Enchantress and Queen Louise doing particularly well.

The Market.

Although the weather still remains quite cold, spring openings in the stores are heralds of the nearness of Easter. Several of the retailers have been kept busy with large store decorations. This and an unusual amount of funeral work has somewhat cleaned up the glut of a few weeks ago. Very few roses are seen in the local market.

The growers are again holding back carnations for the holiday. Nothing but harm can result from this practice. Our customers do not want pickled stock, and especially during the holidays have they a right to demand fresh flowers, as the price is usually doubled. Every customer lost indirectly hurts some grower.

Violets are already showing the effects of warmer weather.

Calla lilies are overplentiful, while longiflorums are just the opposite, more especially in the long-stemmed flowers.

Longiflorum lily plants for Easter are plentiful, but are of unusually short stalks.

There seems to be an abundance of blooming plants this season.

Various Notes.

Robert Watson was on the sick list, but is again able to be around.

Breitmeyer's delivery boys are arrayed in fine new uniforms of a light brown material with brown leather gaiters.

Schroeter's received a large consignment of roses from S. S. Pennock, of Philadelphia. They arrived in fine shape.

H. S.

TOPEKA, KAN.

Peter Miller, a florist of northern Indiana, has been prospecting here for several days with the object of selecting a suitable location near the city for the location of a range of houses. Mr. Miller will erect a wholesale and retail establishment either this summer or next spring. He considers Topeka an ideal opening for such an enterprise. He has the experience and push and there is plenty of capital back of him so, when once started, the project should prove a success.

HERE is a dollar for renewal of our subscription to the florists' best paper. —TRUETT BROS., Franklin, Tenn.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., MARCH 22, 1906.

MR. E. V. SIDELL,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—Having used your "powdered charcoal" in the composition of soil for Violets last season, we are very much pleased with the result. Having used it in place of "wood ash" we consider its fertilizing properties more beneficial in many ways, and the cost much less.

Its chemical action on the soil is marvelous, being lasting on account of stirring up the other fertilizing elements, absorbing their gases, and again giving them off, for the nourishment of plants.

We highly recommend the use of charcoal powder to all interested in growing Violets.

Very truly yours,

THOS. DEVOY & SON.

DAYTON, OHIO.

The Dayton Florists' Club held an enthusiastic meeting Monday evening, March 26, at which a number of amateur floriculturists were admitted to membership. The principal event of the evening was the report by J. B. Heiss on the progress of the national convention which is to be held here next August. The liberality of the city officials, of the fair grounds board commissioners and of the corporations was gratefully commented upon.

At a meeting held last Thursday between H. H. Ritter, Mr. Altick, J. B. Heiss and the officials of the National Cash Register Co., part of the plans were made for the entertainment of the convention. It was announced with regret that the official report on the program by the national committee had not arrived. The N. C. R. people plan an elaborate entertainment.

Mr. Bartholomew, of the Miami Floral Co., as a member of the finance committee, submitted a list of names of well known residents of Dayton who voluntarily offered financial aid to the committee.

AURORA, ILL.—The local greenhouse men are feeling the competition of a Greek flower store recently opened and which is making a big show whenever stock is to be had at cheap prices. There is one consoling feature, however. The Greeks are educating people to buy flowers who never before thought of such a thing.

THE FINEST FERN

Novelty offered for years is the beautiful

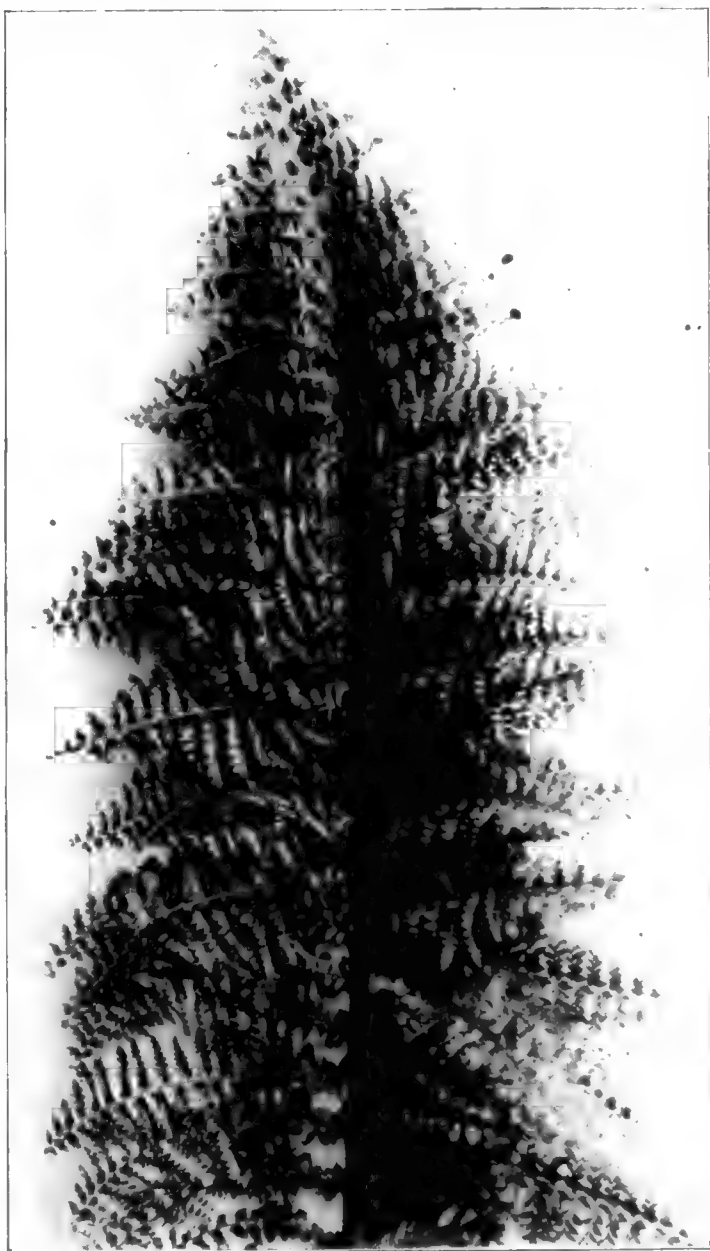

NEPHROLEPIS

WHITMANI

Which we have pleasure in offering to the trade.

Delivery commencing May 1. Orders filled in strict rotation.

THIS FERN received a unanimous report of superior merit from the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston on February 20 last. The Massachusetts Horticultural Society on March 24, at their big spring show, honored it with a Silver Gilt Medal, the highest award made to any of the numerous novelties exhibited.

ALL WHO have seen it exhibited or growing at our greenhouses pronounce it the most perfect fern yet produced and the heavy advance orders received prove its popularity with critical buyers. It has never reverted, grows and increases even more freely than the Boston Fern.

Prices, $25 per 100; $200 per 1000. 500 at 1000 rate.

The Market.

The cut flower business has been rather quiet during the past week, and the weather has been anything but favorable. Roses have accumulated from day to day and only the choice stock finds a fair sale. Owing to the weather conditions, there were few to be seen on the street.

Carnations are now coming in more plentifully and the demand has kept steady for the better quality. Genevieve Lord is largely grown around here and seems to be about the best all-around carnation. In white Flora Hill is still the largest grown, and it takes a good one to excel it in freedom, fragrance, size and, last but not least, keeping quality.

Asparagus and smilax are not equal to the demand. Violets are holding their own pretty well and the best sell for 40 cents per hundred. Sweet peas are improving in quality and quantity, and sell fairly well. Callas and Harrisii have been in oversupply the past week, and southern jonquils are hard to dispose of.

Various Notes.

Miss Anna Friedel, assistant book-keeper at the Florists' Exchange, is very ill.

In general Easter stock this year is in very good shape and a larger assortment has been grown than in previous years.

At the last club meeting a very fine pair of solid gold cuff links were presented to Thos. Patterson for securing the largest number of new members. The club offers a similar premium on members secured during the present year.

Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer Co., Philadelphia, was a visitor.

The Genuine MELODY

Is a first-class commercial Carnation. That's why we have not been in a hurry to get rid of it. Melody is a sport from Mrs. Thos. W. Lawson; color of old Daybreak. It is right up-to-date, blooms as freely as its parent but comes into bloom earlier and has a much better stem. Melody blooms well, keeps well and ships well and has the quantity and quality right there when you want it. We are booking orders now for delivery commencing December 1, 1906.

Carnation Cuttings

FROM SAND OR SOIL

We have an exceptionally fine lot of cuttings of the following varieties ready for immediate shipment, strong and well-rooted cuttings and guaranteed to be A1 in every respect.

Lady Bountiful—White

This we consider at the head of the list of fancy white varieties; it is early, free and produces an abundance of high-grade blooms throughout the season; we can supply them from sand or soil at the following prices: $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

Mrs. M. A. Patten—Variegated

This we consider the best variegated carnation for commercial purposes, all points considered; we have them in quantity from sand or soil. $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000.

Enchantress—Light pink

This popular variety needs no description; it is undoubtedly the best Carnation ever disseminated; we have them in quantity: $3.00 per 100; $20.00 per 1000.

Boston Market—White

For an all-round commercial variety it has no equal, it is remarkably free and vigorous and will pay more per square foot than any other white if properly grown; if you have grown Boston Market and not found it so it is the fault of your methods of growing; it needs lots of feeding from the start, and will then give you an abundance of medium large to fancy flowers throughout the season. It is eagerly sought in the Chicago market on account of its superior keeping qualities; we have them in quantity from sand and soil at the following prices: $1.50 per 100; $12.50 per 1000.

Mrs. T. W. Lawson—Pink

We have this most popular variety in large quantity, excellent stock at $1.50 per 100; $12.50 per 1000.

We have also a large assortment of other standard varieties of Carnations, and shall be pleased to quote you a low price on large quantities. We are strictly Carnation Specialists and devote all our time and place to Carnations and it stands to reason that we are better able to take care of your wants than other houses that devote their attention to a half dozen different cultures.

MR. F. H. KRAMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:—I wish to congratulate you on your new pink rose, "Queen Beatrice." I consider it a rose entirely in a class by itself, and up to the present time I do not think we have anything to compare with it. As a wholesaler, I predict an enormous demand for same, and you can feel assured that whenever the blooms are ready for market, Philadelphia wants its share.

Yours respectfully,
EDWARD REID.

MR. F. H. KRAMER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:—Permit me to commend you on success in getting the exclusive control of the new pink rose, which you have since named Queen Beatrice.

I consider it a splendid thing, and I believe it will prove to be one of the most profitable varieties for the grower especially, that we have had in years.

Very truly yours,
Z. D. BLACKISTONE.

Queen Beatrice, the new Rose grown by F. H. Kramer, is a beauty. The dark green foliage, long stiff stem, and magnificent flowers which are simply beautiful at all stages of development, from the small buds to full, open flowers, which have an agreeable fragrance, together with its color, which has a pleasing effect, are sure to make the rose popular and well worthy of the name Queen.

As a seller it ought to be unsurpassed.

DEAR SIR:—In reference to the new Rose "Queen Beatrice," I am pleased to say that I have watched it growing and blooming for more than two years and believe it to be one of the best and most profitable for every cut flower grower, having all the good qualities and apparently no bad ones, it being a free grower of pleasing color on long stiff stems and plenty of them.

Very truly yours,
WM. F. GUDE.

MR. F. H. KRAMER,

DEAR SIR:—With regard to the Rose, Queen Beatrice, I beg to state that I had quite some knowledge of it before it came into your possession. I was very much impressed with it and thought it would make a very good commercial rose; the length of stem, size of foliage and beauty of flower, both in shape and color, should strongly commend it to all Rose lovers.

Yours very truly,

DEAR SIR:—We do not hesitate to say that the Queen Beatrice would prove a very desirable acquisition to our roses. We are not in a position to speak about its productiveness, etc., we will leave that for the grower to say, but, commercially, its selling qualities are beyond question. We feel confident that we could find a ready market for the flowers, and believe, as from all accounts it is very productive, Queen Beatrice certainly will have a great future.

Hardy Perennial Plants

WE are making a specialty of Hardy Perennial, or Hardy Herbaceous Plants, and have a very large stock of them, particularly in Hollyhocks, Anemones, Columbines, Irises, Gaillardias, Larkspurs, Sweet Williams, Hardy Pinks, Foxgloves, Phloxes, Oriental Poppies, Pyrethrums and Veronicas. Many Florists and Nurserymen, who have a local trade, reap a double profit from Hardy Perennials by making a home planting—a profit from the flowers they produce and one from the sale of plants. By having Hardy Perennials in flower to show their patrons, they are enabled to greatly increase sales, and the increase from the plants themselves is frequently many fold.

Diseased Petunias.

Referring to your answer to W. N. T., I beg to say that I have often noticed the green excrescence on old petunia plants. I break them off and burn them. I have never noticed that cuttings from the same plants were similarly affected. I have grown double petunias from seeds for many years, both from seeds of my own raising and from those bought of other florists, and while the plants are usually healthy, it is seldom I get anything choice and very rarely that I secure anything of unusual merit. I grow my best varieties year after year from cuttings. I suppose they will run out some time, but I would not like to trust to seeds to produce anything like the old Pink Beauty, or even a fine frilled fringed single rose-colored variety that I have perpetuated several years from cuttings and use summers; fertilizing the blossoms with pollen from double varieties to raise double seeds. I would not advise anyone to discard a really choice petunia under expectation of getting something equally good from seed. I write from experience extending over a period of about twenty years.

Dear Sir:—Since using your ice case in our retail flower department we have saved 30 per cent in the consumption of ice. Our saving in flowers we cannot accurately determine, but should estimate conservatively 25 per cent. Not only this, flowers keep with us as they never did before, and retain their salable appearance longer. Your box is certainly a boon to the florist and we predict a wonderful sale on them, especially to the florists, when their qualifications become known.

Yours truly,

The Wittbold Watering System

THIS SYSTEM WAS DEvised FOR GREENHOUSE WORK

but can also be used for outside work with best results. It consists of pipes and tips so arranged that a continuous sheet of water the full length of the house can be supplied to a bench of plants and at the will of the operator can be directed upward from underneath the plants, downward from above the plants or parallel with the bench so that only the soil in the bench is watered. It can be used for syringing or watering. An entire house can be watered or syringed in only a few minutes. It is a permanent asset after being once installed, as it will never wear out, it is inexpensive and will save its cost in hose and labor in the first six months.

Here Are Letters from Well-pleased Users

The balance of our watering machine nozzles arrived to-day. Please rush out the balance of our fittings, etc., at once, as we wish to have our entire range fitted up with your watering system. We are much pleased with the working of the section which we have in at present and we are perfectly satisfied that the time will be very short when all up-to-date growers will use your system instead of the present method of watering with the hose.

In reply to your inquiry as to the nozzles, I wish to say that we do not believe it possible to improve upon them, as they do not clog up, and when spaced the proper distances apart they throw exactly the same amount of water in all parts of the bench. We think the smaller size nozzles would be better for some things, say cuttings or transplanted seedlings, small pot stuff, etc., but we like the large half-inch nozzles best and think that they are the thing for all benched crops. We place them sixteen feet apart and have the feed pipe about four feet above the soil in the benches. We, however, have a very high water pressure here and with less pressure the nozzles would have to be closer together. We are more than pleased with our experiment and feel safe to predict that mechanical watering can and will be used for all greenhouse crops in the near future.

Aurora, Ill., Feb. 2, 1906.

Some time ago we put in one hundred feet of your watering system on trial and find it has given perfect satisfaction. Please send us five hundred feet more as soon as possible, and when we can get to it we want eighteen hundred feet more to fit out our other houses. We think the system a very good thing and consider the labor saved by it will pay for the apparatus in one season.

Trusting that you will send the five hundred feet at your earliest possible convenience, we remain, Yours truly, DAVIS BROS.
Morrison, Ill., July 28, 1905.

W. B. DAVIS & CO.

Your watering system which we ordered as an experiment and with which we equipped one of our rose houses is doing the work to our entire satisfaction, and we have decided to equip five more houses with your system. You may send us at your earliest convenience 1,000 feet ready to put up.

We wish to state that your system of watering is certainly a success and when better known will be universally used. The time saved in labor will pay for the system in a short time.

Kindly rush this order, as we have time at present to do the work.

Arlington Heights, Ill., Feb. 10, 1906.

KLEHM'S NURSERIES.

In regard to your watering system, I think it a fine thing. I have raised one crop of lettuce and did not use the hose once. It waters a space about twenty feet wide and the way we put it in the cost is not very much. I used black pipe and cannot see but it is as good as galvanized. This is the last winter I shall use a hose. Will pipe all my place before another winter. Will have 45,000 feet all in lettuce, so you see the water problem is a serious one with me. My houses are thirty-four feet wide and two lines water them well.

I see no good reason why it should not come into general use and wonder why greenhouse men have not taken hold more. I certainly would be glad to recommend it to anyone. The water is put on more evenly than the average man will with a hose, and another great advantage, the watering can be done at the best time for the good of the plants.

I wish you the best of success with your system and anything I can do to help you to introduce it will be glad to do it.

Carthage, Mo., Feb. 6, 1906.

STEPHEN HYDE.

[Note that each letter contains a re-order—that's what talks.]

It will pay growers to visit either of the Geo. Wittbold Co.'s two places or any of the above and see the system working.

The system can be fed from one end if sufficient pressure is available and a swivel wheel used to turn the pipe. This is the most simple means of giving same a trial. Swivel wheel will cost $2.00 and 1/2-inch nozzles (which can be screwed into tees) 50 cents each. These can be placed on pipe from 10 to 50 feet apart, according to pressure of water.

A swivel wheel and six nozzles, which will cost $5.00, will be the best investment a florist can make and will show exactly what the system will do.

When watering or syringing is to be done and spray is obstructed by foliage, my small nozzle and 1/2-inch pipe tapped and fed every 25 feet is best. This system with all connections and pipe ready to put up will cost you $20.00 per 100 feet.

The Wittbold Hose Nozzle

for greenhouse or garden use is far superior to anything on the market, the spray can be changed instantly from a fine fan-shaped spray into any form or shape the operator may desire, by simply pushing a sleeve backward and forward. This can be done as quickly as taking the finger on and off the hose.

Price $1.00.

KNIPHOFIAS.

Recent introductions of species of kniphofia, or tritoma, as they are more frequently called, and the good products of skilful hybridists who have raised new color varieties from species already well known, have increased the garden value of this genus. They can now be had in many fascinating shades of color, ranging from creamy white through all shades of yellow, apricot, coral, red and crimson, either self-colored or in the two or three contrasting shades peculiar to the group.

Early winter and early spring are the best seasons for moving and planting kniphofias, and the Gardeners' Chronicle says it is preferable in naturally retentive soils to cover the crowns with but three inches of soil, or decay may ensue; their own contractile roots will pull the plants deeper into the ground as growth goes on. Practically all species are hardy in England and in the United States south of Philadelphia, if well protected, but farther north they should be dried and stored over winter and replanted in spring. Firm planting is desirable, and the roots should be spread apart to ensure good anchorage and thus prevent frosts lifting the plants above the ground level and exposing the rootstock. If the plantation is a new one and the plants have to be purchased, only those should be chosen whose leaves and roots are uncut.

Many nurserymen still follow the unfortunate practice of trimming the roots and leaves of kniphofias close to the rootstock, treating the plants as though they were deciduous bulbs—nothing can be more detrimental to the plant's welfare than this. The shortened leaves form a perfect funnel to conduct water to the rootstock in the depth of winter, and the mutilated roots are in a sodden state

AMARYLLIS.

Hippeastrums, or amaryllises are not usually looked upon as suitable for market work; yet from what I gather from K. Drost, of Richmond, there seems a future for them. Mr. Drost grows them in large quantities and has a fine strain; considering they are all unnamed seedlings. This in the first place shows what may be done in the way of getting good stock from seed; for among the large number grown very few of inferior type are seen. By cutting the flowers before they are too far developed they last fairly well, and they are much appreciated for decorations. I should hardly think it would prove profitable if we got too many on the market, yet with the style of decorations now in fashion they are most suitable. There may be few who would succeed so well with them as Mr. Drost does, and being closely connected with the west end florists, he has another advantage: most of his blooms are on order even before they are ready to cut. Those who would take up their culture must be in connection with the florists who have choice work to carry out. If sent to Covent Garden market, some mornings they might sell at top prices, but it might often happen that there would be no demand for them, for I know the same thing occurs with other choice flowers.

I believe it is chiefly for cut bloom that Mr. Drost grows the amaryllis, yet as pot plants for decorations they are very effective. They are just the sort of plants to stand up well among choice ferns, as they give a little relief without detracting from the beauty of the ferns. We are now getting a surplus of many things which, a few years ago, were difficult to procure, and it becomes more and more necessary to look for something fresh for choice work, and in the amaryllis we have at least one subject that has not yet been overdone, and there should be an opening for anyone to make a profitable return if they did them well.—Horticultural Advertiser.

HAIL.

E. F. Walter, of Junction City, Kan., thinks if cannonading will disperse hail storms the United States government might try the experiment by sending a battery of artillery over from Fort Riley to do the trick.

John G. Esler supplements this by suggesting that the government have a flying machine equipped with wireless apparatus, searching for the hail storm, so that the battery won't waste powder on anything but the real article.

FOSTER VALVE SPECIALTIES

Mr. Peter Reinberg, of Chicago, formerly had considerable difficulty in obtaining an even temperature in his greenhouses, as the heat would vary every time the boiler was fired. He remedied his troubles by placing a large 10-inch on his main feed pipe just inside the greenhouses. Now, if the weather grows colder, instead of turning on more pipes, the grower in charge simply turns up on the adjusting nut of the FOSTER VALVE and obtains more steam, hence heat.

Foster Pressure Regulator

Would Not a Foster Pressure Regulator be of Service in Your Greenhouse?

It is an apparent economy judging by Mr. Reinberg's experience. If you will state your conditions, it will give us pleasure to help you if we can. And in the event that any of our large number of specialties are not suitable for your conditions, we will tell you so.

"SUPERIOR, surpassing others in quality."—Century Dictionary.

Superior Boilers

DO surpass others in quality. Made of the same STEEL as high pressure boilers; no sections to give way on a cold night, as with cast iron heaters—it isn't fair to call them "boilers." Made of HEAVIER steel than any other steel boiler; naturally they last longer.

LARGEST HEATING SURFACE. MOST PERFECT COMBUSTION. BEST OF CIRCULATION INSURED.

READ WHAT A FEW USERS SAY:

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your boilers a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler."—TREANOR & RETTIC, South Bend, Ind.

"We are running twelve of your Superior Boilers and find them satisfactory in every respect. They are not only good heaters, but economical to operate. We shall be pleased to have florists visit our place to see these Boilers working."—PETER REINBERG, Chicago.

You wouldn't expect the Superior Boiler to be cheaper than the inferior boiler, except in the long run, would you?

WE SPOKE LAST WEEK

About our kind of linseed oil that goes into our kind of greenhouse paint, and why—now about the greenhouse itself.

Our many patented parts for the elimination of shading members, while giving increased strength to the sashbar house has brought us many friends—friends who believe in our patents, our materials and our way of building houses. But why build sashbar ridge and furrow houses, which shade each other, when with the right amount of space, separate iron frame houses can be built, if of good width and good length, without materially increasing the expense? A better proposition in every way because you have a lighter house—a more durable house—a house that costs less in erecting and less to maintain. By costing less in erecting we mean that sashbar houses must be cut and fitted “on the job,” which takes a good bit more time than you have any idea of—if you have not compared it with the speed with which an iron frame house goes up. With the iron frame, all parts are passed through a line of machines at the factory, where they are cut, shaped, punched and fitted and everything made ready for immediate erection when the materials are delivered to you; it's then merely a matter of setting up the parts and fixing the screws and bolts. So you see the erecting expense is greatly reduced and practically equalizes the slight advance in cost of the iron frame house over the wooden structure—and then what a machine you have to work with for at least half a century to come.

ROOF BAR FOR IRON FRAME
GREENHOUSE.

This house shown is 45 feet 6 inches wide and about 300 feet long, and is being erected for the Cottage Gardens Company, the great carnation growers. The benches used by Mr. Ward are three feet, six inches wide and the house is built to accommodate eight of them.

The order for the house was placed the last of January. The photo was taken first of March. Quick work—and goes to show it's not an all season's matter with us to fill orders for our iron frame houses.

Do you believe as thoroughly in economy as you think you do? If you do, then the question of erection costs and 25 per cent. less fuel expense will convince you that the large iron houses are the only houses to build.

ROSES FOR CUT BLOOM.

[A paper by Benjamin Dorrance, Dorranceton, Pa., read before the New York Florists' Club, April 9, 1906.]

When I received the invitation from Mr. O'Mara, of your committee, to write a paper on the rose, I was in Egypt, and it was only after a good deal of hesitation that I thought best to accept. I regret that my want of knowledge must be so much in evidence. To talk to practical men, thoroughly up on the subject, as you are, I confess, is most embarrassing. To relate only a part of my experience and trust that you will forgive the presumption, I will tell you my reasons for accepting.

Primarily, I am under obligations to many members of the New York Florists' Club, both on the grounds of friendship and of customers, whom I value highly. Then, when a member of the firm of Peter Henderson & Co. asks me to do anything, I feel that I owe it to the memory of the respected founder of that establishment to do whatever I can, no matter how poorly, to advance the rose, since he, now so long gone but not forgotten, was the chief instrument in turning a poor, blind lawyer from the path he had trod to the sweeter, pleasanter, brighter path of a rose grower.

The Story of a Start.

Well do I remember the day when, having had it announced to me by an oculist that if I wished to be able to see the sweet light of day, and nature's beauties, I must absolutely give up my profession. Not feeling at the best, as you can understand, I strolled down Cortlandt street, and, stopping in to see Mr. Henderson, received a kind invitation to visit the Jersey City establishment. It is but as yesterday that we walked through the houses and he so kindly showed me the methods he found best for treatment of the various plants, and naturally we talked of my loss. He said to me, "You have the land and cheap fuel; why don't you try rose growing? Go over to John Henderson's, at Flushing, and see what he is doing." And I did. Now, to this advice I owe whatever of success I may have made in the work, and it is little I can do to repay, and, as I have said, I felt it a duty to say yes. Let this be my apology.

It was about 1882 that I first gave my attention to rose growing, and today, when Bon Silene, Souvenir d'un Ami, Sprunt, Mermet and other nearly forgotten roses of the past are mentioned, it takes me back to the days when I struggled to get some slight return for the efforts I put forth to learn why Perle would not open and why Niphotos preferred to bow its head to Mother Earth. Then Cornelia Cook stood peer of all the whites, with its long, erect stems, and delighted in brick dust and cow manure piled high around the pots.

The Growing Galaxy.

Do you remember when John May sent out the Bride? And how happy all were that at last we had a white rose that would give us freely flowers without coaxing! Do you remember Charley Ander-

Sprinkled here and there through all this time new roses grew, bloomed and died because not good; hopes built but to be blasted, and Perle remained the only yellow for the florist.

Liberty came, sweet, yet disappointing to most growers. Now Richmond comes to do her battle. Which shall win?

Each succeeding year brings before you new candidates for your favor. They rise, they shine, they disappear. Sweet is the child of one's own raising. Each thinks his will succeed, and yet, when brought before the judgment of the buyer, they are doomed to live only in the memory of the originator. And Beauty reigns, still as ever, in plant or woman, queen of all.

Beauty the Leader.

To go over the long list of roses that from time to time has been added to by candidates for popular favor would seem useless, since, once condemned, there is little hope for resurrection and they stand only as monuments to the immense if fruitless labor of careful, painstaking workers. Here and there one remains, for a brief period, a seeming success, only to be supplanted by some new candidate, perhaps better, far more probably not so good as the old. Still there

That Beauty has so long been a favorite is not to be wondered at, for although not a truly beautiful rose (at least in some eyes) never as yet has one been produced with the vigor of growth and luxuriance of this rose and when to these is added its fine fragrance, it is not surprising that it has a hold on

Beauty the Leader.

To go over the long list of roses that from time to time has been added to by candidates for popular favor would seem useless, since, once condemned, there is little hope for resurrection and they stand only as monuments to the immense if fruitless labor of careful, painstaking workers. Then Meteor burst forth, out of darkness, to give us the first good red of profuse bloom.

remains the list of but ten or a dozen, the standbys, the reliance of grower and salesman.

The Beauty has so long been a favorite it is not to be wondered at, for all though not a truly beautiful rose (at least in some eyes) never as yet has one been produced with the vigor of growth and luxuriance of this rose and what to these is added its fine fragrance, it is not surprising that it has a hold the popular heart only to be broken by a more wonderful rose yet to be produced. Whether a hybrid or a hybrid tea, found by accident or purpose, the fact remains that it was the first of the hybrid class that proved to be ever-blooming under glass. May we not learn from this accident that there may be others among the hybrid perpetuals which under skilful treatment could be induced to give us as freely of their bloom and of their brilliant coloring.

Testout for Home Trade.

Bride and Bridesmaid, offspring of good old Mermet, must remain long the leaders in their race of tall-growing teas.

Testout was a revelation in the clear pink class and, while never a great favorite, was, I think, among the very best of summer roses under glass. It still remains a most prolific bearer. To me it has been a source of wonderment that the retail florist, who grows flowers for his own use, has not made more of this rose. It responds to a generous treatment as gratefully as any rose I know of. Do you remember it as staged by E. G. Asmus at the shows of say ten years ago? Was it not fine?

Mrs. Pierpont Morgan, with Canadian Queen and Mrs. Oliver Ames, followed Mme. Cusin, both sports from it, and except for the size of Mrs. Morgan, no great improvement over their parent. For delicacy of flower when great length of stem is not required, to me there can be no more pleasing bloom and certainly the production is not stinted.

The Rival Reds.

Meteor was the first continuous blooming red rose of size and merit sufficient to warrant growing it in number, and the finest blooms were doughty rivals of Jacqueminot, but its bad habit of throwing faulty blooms on the best growths set all the world agog trying for an improvement, and when Liberty came there was great rejoicing. But this is not a rose that grows for everyone, and murmurs of dissatisfaction were heard from many quarters. Now that there is Richmond to fall back upon it is to be hoped that for every one an abundance of red roses may be had. The choice between is a matter for the individual and no opinion of one will influence the other.

These seem to be the bulk of roses grown for market in the large centers and, while the demand for them continues, they must of necessity be the ones to which the grower will give the closest attention.

Other Claimants.

I have omitted any mention of the lesser lights and will content myself with simply mentioning some that appear in the markets with more or less regularity, saying that in roses as in other things, variety is the space of life. La France, once so popular, seemed to die when Nyack soil refused to longer perform its wonders. There have been and still are others in the line, that, while candidates for favor, have gradually disappeared.

Today Wellesley, on the same line, is a candidate. May it live long and prosper. Franz Deegen, a yellow with orange tint, old Mme. Hoste, yellowish white, now and then Bon Silene, forerunner of them all, still has her admirers. Madame Chatenay is fine when well grown. Then there is Golden Gate, ugly when large, droopy when medium, ragged when small. Sunrise, essence of light in color, rather small and yet beautiful, can still be seen, while Sunset went the way of all the earth.

Killarney is a candidate for favor

There are still others that, beautiful in and by themselves, when brought under the fire of close examination, do not stand the test and have been relegated, most of them, to the scrap pile.

You will notice I have made no mention of any hybrid perpetuals, chiefly because I know nothing of them. As market men they concern us little, since they are of little moment for cut bloom and it was only about roses for market that I understood I was expected to talk tonight.

Some Serious Questions.

As a grower for market, while thinking of what I should say to you, there have come to me several questions that perhaps may have come to you and this may be a good opportunity to ventilate them in a degree. There seems to be one question, unanswered, yet ever coming up, that since each year there are new roses brought forward, is it good business to keep planting old kinds to the exclusion of the new? Do we advance as rapidly as we might? Do we give the new roses a fair show? Is it possible that the old are so good that we do not need the new?

Knowing the state of the market generally, what is the encouragement for growers to make any increase in the area of ground under glass? Is there any inducement or business opening for new men to embark in growing and if yes, how should the beginning be made, with a small or a large plant?

What influence has it had on the market to have erected such large plants as have been built in the west?

What improvements have been made in growing methods in the past year?

Which class of roses is best for the general market, tea or hybrid tea?

What is the general market and what are its demands? By the general market I mean the market as made up of all classes of people as buyers, and by demands I mean quality, quantity and variety.

But What Is Quality?

It goes without saying that quality is always a first requisite and that a good rose is always more desirable than a poor one, but the word quality as generally understood in this market means that as a rose, no matter how good the bloom itself may be, if stem is not an element it must go in a low class, while many roses the blooms of which would attract little attention otherwise, if with long, stiff stems, seem to rank high.

Naturally it must seem that the body of buyers be composed of a few high priced, a large number of medium priced and a very large number of low priced individuals. What proportions do these bear to each other? What do they demand in variety? Are they entirely content with what we are now giving them, or do they want others, old or new?

I am well aware that New York is said to be the best market for the best and the poorest market for the poor. If this be so, why is it?

This naturally leads to another question: What constitutes a valuable rose and which characteristic is the most valuable? What constitutes a good or perfect rose, viewed from a retail standpoint and what from the grower's view?

Does specialization in growing lead to the production of better flowers? Has it been noticed whether, since the tendency has been to confine efforts to separate classes, any appreciable increase has been made in the number or quality of such flowers?

cient to warrant growing it in number, and the finest blooms were doughty rivals of Jacqueminot, but its bad habit of throwing faulty blooms on the best growths set all the world agog trying for an improvement, and when Liberty among the pinks. What success it may have still remains to be seen. Resurrected from the forgotten, it may be there are others that, if handled differently, might prove at least worthy of a trial.

What effect on the market has the introduction of the hybrid tea and as against the tea?

The Influence of Exhibitions.

What influence do rose shows have on the market? Stimulant, depressing or neutral? In what condition should roses be shown? Specially prepared or in such a condition as a careful grower would have his shipments for the market? In other words, are the exhibits at the rose show any true index of the roses grown by the exhibitor and thus any criterion for forming a judgment of his general ability, or are they simply a selected few specially prepared with the view of winning prizes irrespective of the keeping qualities and availability for market purposes; and as such are they good educators of the public, or is this not the intention and purpose of rose shows?

Advice for Beginners.

I presume no one has been in the business for twenty years and made a moderate success who has not had more or less inquiry from inexperienced men and women, asking how he or she may make a beginning. As advice is usually cheap and moralizing easy, I usually give the following as a formula, premising it with the remark that the best way is to go to some good grower and work for him until the principle has been mastered, that constant watchfulness, great care, the utmost cleanliness and steady work are the "open sesame." The minutiae will only come from experience, and he who has pluck to succeed will do so in spite of failures and, learning from mistakes, eventually make as few as possible, having done which he will have reached as near perfection as any of us will ever come.

To the grower of roses under glass, problems are always coming. There are no hard and fast rules that, laid down, can be followed. The novice can learn the general principles by an earnest attention to the work as he sees it done under his tutor and the brain work must keep up with the manual; the reasons for certain lines of treatment must be understood, not blindly accepted as rules invariable, but to the end that under certain conditions a given treatment ought to produce a certain result. The endeavor to learn the cause of failure may result in greater success, as well as a mere correction of the error.

There is probably no branch of agriculture that will so well repay intelligent effort as the production of flowers under glass, but the road is not all smooth, the failures are as many as the successes, and it is only by persistent work, undaunted by failures, unconquered by mistakes, a grim determination to succeed even under most adverse circumstances, that the goal of success may be reached and the satisfaction had of having conquered.

A DWARF BOLTONIA.

The accompanying illustration shows a dwarf Boltonia Latisquamæa. It is identical with the species except that it is a stocky, sturdy plant from fifteen to eighteen inches high, the parent being tall and somewhat sprawling. The variety originated at the establishment of J. T. Lovett, Little Silver, N. J., who is distributing it widely. The flowers are those of the species, the color being the same shell pink with a bright yellow center, and fully as large as in the tall-growing variety. Mr. Lovett says it flowers with even greater freedom, but its great merit lies in its habit.

A WELL-GROWN LILY.

The accompanying illustration shows well-grown longiflorum lilies in a 12-inch pan, such as are in demand in the better class of retail stores at Easter. This specimen was shown by Frank Oeschlin, of the Garfield Park Flower Co., Chicago, in 1905. It is his practice to pot the bulbs separately and make up in pans when the plants are a few inches high, thereby securing uniformity of height and flower. This pan contained seven 7x9 bulbs and there were an average of three open flowers and one well developed bud on each plant. Such a specimen, with a pot cover, readily sells for from $12 to $15 in the better class of stores.

LILIES FROM BERMUDA.

The steamer Bermudian, from Hamilton, which arrived at New York April 7, brought the annual shipment of cut lilies, not so large as in some previous seasons. Following are the consignees and the number of cases for each: E. R. Brackett & Co., two; L. D. Crossmond, sixty; R. F. Downing & Co., one; Furman & Page, five; Morris Express Co., thirty-one; Titus Bros., seven; F. B. Vandegrift & Co., 209; Wells, Fargo & Co., 220; total, 528.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS

Badge Book and Dues.

In accordance with the instructions voted at the convention in Washington last August, the secretary will, under the supervision of the executive board, proceed to prepare a "badge book" containing the names of members, numbered, and will issue correspondingly numbered badges to those whose dues for 1906 are paid previous to June 1. Members in arrears for current year's dues, as well as all persons intending to take out membership this year, are earnestly requested to remit now. There is no advantage in waiting until the convention meets, as the fiscal year begins on January 1 and payments made at any date during the year cover the interim until December 31 only.

Outdoor Exhibit at Dayton.

Circulars and entry sheets are being sent out this week to all nurserymen and others dealing in outdoor planting material, tender or hardy. Plans of the beds as laid out are in the secretary's office and all information not given in the printed circulars will be cheerfully furnished by the secretary to all inquirers.

It is desirable that all planting be completed by May 1, if possible, and the necessity for prompt response is urged upon all intending exhibitors. The fair grounds where the beds are to be laid out is city property, used for many public affairs, and is contiguous to the works of the National Cash Register Co. As soon as planted, the advertising label of each owner will be placed on the groups and same will be cared for all through the summer until the S. A. F. convention meets in August. Many thousands of tourists and local visitors will inspect the plantings, and the opportunity thus provided dealers in conifers, shrubs and ornamental trees, herbaceous plants, summer bulbs, roots and bedding plants, for widespread and effective public advertising has never been equaled. Dayton is well known as one of the most advanced communities in this country in the matter of adornment of streets and public and private grounds. A goodly number of applications for space for cannas, roses, phloxes, asters and evergreens are already filed with the secretary. For further information address

ROSE SOIL FOR CARNATIONS.

Kindly advise me in regard to using soil for carnations that has grown roses one year. The soil was made from two-thirds rotted sod and one-third rotted cow manure. I thought by making a compost of this soil, mixing in bone meal and horse manure, would be better than the soil I now use, as it is very heavy, with some clay, an ideal rose soil but too heavy for carnations.

W. F. Y.

A few years ago it was a common practice to use old rose soil for carnations, and very good carnations were often grown on it, but when carnation specialists began the practice of using new soil it did not take them long to demonstrate that new soil is far superior, for growing carnations, to any old rose soil you can find.

While roses as a rule like a heavier soil than carnations, yet both take very much the same food from the soil, and after a crop of roses has been grown on the soil it is no more fit for carnation growing than it would be if the crop had been carnations. Because carnations like an open soil and because old rose soil is usually light and loose, it does not follow that it is good carnation soil. The plant food has been taken from it and what remains is merely the bulk.

I would advise you to use the same soil you use for roses and if, as you say, it is too heavy for carnations, instead of mixing in cow manure in composting, use horse manure with considerable straw. If you can get sand you can mix it in to help cut up the clay, say about one load of sharp sand to eight or ten loads of soil.

You should have composted your carnation soil last fall, and you would be more certain of having it in good condition by planting time. When making such marked changes in the mechanical condition of your soil it requires more time and more frequent handling to get the component parts thoroughly incorporated. Instead of the one or two turnings we usually give the compost heap, it will require three or four turnings to get it thoroughly mixed. This can hardly be done after it dries off enough to handle, when carnation housing is practiced as early as it is done nowadays. On the other hand, if you make your compost pile in the fall, the sod and manure will rot by spring and the whole is in better condition to mix.

I cannot understand why growers so often leave such an important part of their preparations until spring, when it should be done in the fall. Not only will the soil be in much better condition for the carnations, but there is more time in the fall for that kind of work. For roses soil that is composted in the spring does very well and in fact is preferred by many growers, but not so with carnations. If there is anything carnations like it is a soil that is well prepared and in which all sod and such matter is well decomposed.

It is very important that the soil be in proper condition when you turn it. During early spring, when rains are frequent, it is apt to be too wet to handle, and in such case you would better put off all such work until it has dried off enough to crumble nicely when being handled, even though it may make it rather late. It will be in much better shape in the end.

Some growers mix in the bone when turning the soil in the spring, but we prefer to wait until it is on the benches and ready to plant. Much of it is washed away by heavy rains if mixed and left outdoors, but the main reason is that when it is mixed into the soil three or four months before it is wanted by the plants, it decomposes and is all available when the plants are set and will become exhausted much sooner than when it is mixed in at planting time. In the latter case it becomes available as the plants require it and will last almost through the season. A. F. J. BAUR.

AT THE CREAM CITY.

The illustration opposite is from a photograph of the establishment of Holton & Hunkel Co., Milwaukee, Wis. This is one of the progressive concerns of the west. Both F. H. Holton and H. V. Hunkel are well known and popular in the trade and their energy and promptness to grasp the opportunity afforded for doing business with Milwaukee as a base has enabled them to build up a constituency covering a large part of the northwest and spreading constantly. Milwaukee is not only a wealthy city but it has several natural advantages as a center for wholesaling cut flowers. The business of the Holton & Hunkel Co. in this department has grown rapidly, perhaps because they have maintained an equipment capable at all times of handling just a little more business than was being done.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Solanums.

It is about time to sow seeds of the ornamental fruiting pepper, Jerusalem cherry and that very ornamental species grown so largely the past five or six years that bears scarlet, yellow and white fruit at the same time, the correct name for which I must admit I do not know, unless it is the celestial cherry. If these solanums are grown too large they are in poor demand. A plant of moderate size, well fruited, is most to be desired. Therefore, if sown now and planted out at the end of June, it will be early enough. A sandy soil that has not had any manure recently is about right. After making a moderate growth, the hot midsummer weather will produce a profuse blooming, and as soon as the fruit is set they should be lifted and potted. This will insure small plants with plenty of fruit, and that is what we are after.

The Rambler Roses.

Although Easter is not yet here, we already can see where we could improve. We had occasion to say last January that we had mastered the art of lifting the Rambler roses in November and getting them to break in January and flower well the following spring. They did break finely, but nearly all the lower eyes on the canes were blind and produced no flowers, and we are going back to our old method of growing them in pots over summer, feeling sure this is the method to get a well-flowered plant the following spring. This spring we have seen plants of Crimson Rambler that came from Philadelphia. They have a few nice trusses of flowers at the tops, but are leggy, bare plants and not by any means what we should consider well-flowered plants.

Many of you will have plants among your Crimson Ramblers that have so few flowers you will not expect to sell them. They will most likely have made two or three strong sucker growths, or growths from near the base of the plant, that will not flower this year. If you cut away all last summer's growth and encourage these young, strong shoots to grow you will be sure to have fine, strong flowering canes for next spring, and you will get more flowers from two strong well ripened canes than you will from six unripened canes lifted next fall from the fields. Old heads will say, "Yes, but that won't pay." You have had them two winters and one summer in pots and the soil in the pots will be exhausted. The exhaustion can be overcome and the apparently long season under glass can be reduced to six months of winter and three months of summer all told.

Dormant Ramblers.

But this first winter's growth to produce fine canes is not necessary; it can be dispensed with. You can start now, with dormant plants from the field. It is all in the first six weeks' management. Cut them down low, very low, and place in a cool house or pit the first two weeks. Shade slightly and syringe often if the weather is bright. A dormant plant that will go into a 6-inch pot is large and strong enough.

In two weeks they will have broken at many eyes, more than you observed, and at other adventitious eyes. Rub off all but five or six breaks or growths. The next three weeks is the critical time. Don't take them from the pot or frame and slam them in a cool, draughty house, especially near an open door. Give them 10 degrees higher temperature, full light and frequent syringing or light spraying. When the young growths are two or three inches long, rub off the two weakest, for three canes is all you want to make the best furnished plant. As the young growths lengthen there is also plenty of root action, and six weeks from the time of starting they will endure and enjoy the maximum temperature. That time with them will correspond with the month of June with our deciduous trees and shrubs outdoors, which are then making their most vigorous growth.

By midsummer they have made all the growth desirable, but future treatment I hope to talk about later on; only don't forget that a severe drying out or extremes of temperature when they are making their most vigorous growth, and consequently softest, is likely to be followed by mildew, which greatly weakens their vigor.

All this sounds like a good deal of care, but if you love your plants it is only a labor of love. Without any advice, but with simple earthly inspiration, we tried this plant some seven or eight years ago and it was a great success, so we are not guessing.

Hybrid Roses.

Hybrid perpetuals deserve a long chapter, but there is nothing very seasonable to say about them except that any good varieties that have made a strong growth, with few flowers, are well worth keeping. The strong canes they have made this spring, if ripened this fall, will be sure to flower next spring. I must say a word about them now. The H. P. roses and the ramblers are totally different in habit and manner of flowering. The H. P. can be lifted in November, but before starting to force can and must be cut down to within a few eyes. With this small amount of top, the roots, as soon as they become active, are able to support and maintain the few vigorous breaks that eventually flower.

We are compelled sometimes to illustrate our arguments by our own experience, therefore will say that last fall we purchased 1,000 dormant plants from Storrs & Harrison Co., treated them as described in these pages last November and again in January, lost none and all broke finely and the great majority flowered well; that is, four to six blooms on each plant.

Yet it is a fact that the flowers are thin and not lasting, which is only what must be expected in a plant that has so little root foundation.

If I were going to grow hybrid roses as a specialty I should pursue a different method, slightly more expensive, but it would pay. Obtain strong plants in the fall and treat just as you would if going to force them for flower the following spring. Instead of bringing into heat in January, you might defer this till February, then start them slowly and save only five or six of the strongest breaks, and with proper care and ripened off in the fall you would have a plant that would dazzle the eyes of the "get rich quick" florist. Labor and thought would be a bigger factor than the space they occupied in the expense of growing by this method.

Pansies.

Just about now have a look at your pansy frames and press into the ground all those heaved out by the late heavy frosts. Don't be disappointed at the first blooms on plants from seed for which you gave $10 per ounce. Remember the glorious Milton, who, with all his wonderful religious poems, dictated to a daughter, his own eyes darkened by blindness, must have remembered the sight of nature when his vision was perfect, for he says:

Abortive like the first-born flowers of spring.
Nipped by the lingering rear of winter's frost.

MANURE FOR ASTERS.

Please tell me what fertilizer is preferred for asters besides manure? Would bone meal be all right? What part of the fertilizer do they like best, ammonia, lime, bone, phosphate or potash?

E. A. M.

We have not experimented largely with the different chemical manures for asters. We once put on a good dressing of what is known commercially as superphosphate, with good results. At other times we depended on barnyard manure public affairs, and is contiguous to the works of the National Cash Register Co. As soon as planted, the advertising label of each owner will be placed on the groups and same will be cared for all through the summer until the S. A. F. convention meets in August. Many thousands of tourists and local visitors will inspect the plantings, and the opportunity thus provided dealers in conifers, shrubs and ornamental trees, herbaceous plants, summer bulbs, roots and bedding plants, for widespread and effective public advertising has never been equaled. Dayton is well known as one of the most advanced communities in this country in the matter of adornment of streets and public and private grounds. A goodly number of applications for space for cannas, roses, phloxes, asters and evergreens are already filed with the secretary. For further information address

SOME NEWER EASTER PLANTS.

[A paper by Robert Craig, read before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, April 3, 1906.]

Just eighteen years ago, on April 9, 1888, I read a paper before this club in which I alluded to the Easter plant trade as having become the most important of the whole year. I recited the fact that there had been a great advance in the number of plants grown, as well as in the increased variety from the time, only a few years back, when callas, geraniums, mignonette, violets, etc., were the staples. In that year, 1888, I mentioned Lilium Harrisii, L. longiflorum, Hydrangea Otaksa and Thomas Hogg, azaleas, deutzias, genistas, Astilbe Japonica, and hybrid roses as the staples. All of these are still grown, only in larger numbers; the general culture is better and finer specimens are grown.

The Rambler Roses.

Since that time we have had several notable additions to the list of Easter plants. I think the Crimson Rambler may be mentioned as the most important. It is a very valuable plant. The much heralded Baby Rambler, while valuable as a bedding rose, is not so good for Easter purposes, especially in large specimens. Dorothy Perkins, the pink rambler, is fine, and has come to stay. In the same class may be mentioned several of Mr. Walsh's new hybrid climbers, particularly Lady Gay, which is a superb thing.

A German rose called Leuchtstern, single, pink with rings of white inside and the center yellow, which I saw in New York the other day, impressed me very favorably. The foliage was fine and the blooms pretty and abundant. It seemed a good keeper, not easily shaken off.

A few other varieties of roses are fine for Easter. Chief of these are Magna Charta and Mrs. John Laing. Frau Karl Druschki promises to be a good white, although it has hardly had a fair trial yet.

Miscellaneous Plants.

In spiræas we have had several improved varieties. The best one, all things considered, is Gladstone.

Bougainvillea Sanderiana is another very valuable Easter plant, and if the wood is properly ripened will flower most profusely in all sizes of plants from those in 4-inch pots, suitable for basket work, up to very large specimens.

Cineraria stellata, of the improved compact-growing varieties, is a very showy plant, but still capable of much further improvement by careful selection of seed from those varieties most suitable for store use.

A plant which I have not seen with the Philadelphia growers, but which is well done in New York is the boronia, which bears its globular, purplish-pink flowers in great profusion.

Another plant worthy of culture is Lilium lancifolium rubrum and album, valuable either for cutting or pot plants; they are easily obtainable at Easter, from cold storage bulbs.

Deutzias and Others.

Another plant deserving of attention is Deutzia Lemoinei, which was tried and discarded several years ago by several of our growers as inferior to D. gracilis, but which has now proved to be valuable to several growers, particularly as to the durability of its flowers, which do not drop as easily as those of D. gracilis. The chief point in the culture is the lifting by August or before, so as to have the pots full of new roots before cold weather. This also is necessary with D. gracilis.

There has been introduced to this country this year a valuable new azalea, named for Julius Roehrs. This will undoubtedly become a leading variety. It is of the same general character as Mme. Vander Cruysen, but of a richer, brighter color.

A good novelty this year is Marguerite Queen Alexandra, an excellent pot plant.

Rhododendrons are now largely grown. The best new one that has come to my notice is commonly known as Red Camille de Rohan.

For the Future.

As we have had from time to time valuable additions to the list of Easter plants, so we may continue to expect them. We are promised a new pink spiræa for next year, of a lovely shade of color, for the stock of which £1,000 is reported to have been refused. Both Veitch & Sons and Sander & Son made that offer.

The growing of plants for Easter involves much extra work in the moving from house to house as the weather changes, so as to have everything just right at the one time, the compensation for this extra work being that there is generally a demand for all good plants offered at a fair price.

NO SHOW AT KANSAS CITY.

The directors of Convention Hall, Kansas City, Mo., under whose auspices all the recent flower shows in Kansas City have been held, have decided not to conduct a show this year. The show last November was accounted a brilliant success from the standpoint of a beautiful exhibition, and was also satisfactory financially, but the majority of the florists of Kansas City feel that it is not wise to attempt to give a show oftener than every other year, and hence there will not be any show at Convention Hall until November, 1907.

LOUIS W. SHOUSE, Sec'y.

AN EASTER SHOW.

At the Easter season it is the practice of practically all florists who meet the public to put their best foot forward, or, as Wm. Scott puts it, "Wash all you got and hang out all you wash." If there is any season at which it pays a retailer to make an elaborate display it is at Easter. It is a season, too, when retail stores always appear at their best because of the profusion of flowering plants.

To show what Samuel Murray, Kansas City, does in this direction, the accompanying illustrations are reproduced from photographs taken just before Easter last year. One of the pictures shows his store as one views it from the entrance. The other shows the conservatory as it appeared from the rear door of the store. An inspection of the pictures will also give an idea of the extent and character of Mr. Murray's facilities and business. Kansas City is a flower town and Mr. Murray is a florist to whom none is more ready to take advantage of the business opportunities afforded by the growth in wealth and the advance of refinement in his community.

RUST ON VERBENAS.

Will you please give us a remedy for rust on verbenas? Ours are troubled very badly with it. W. & S.

If I were to bluntly say throw away every verbenas plant that is infested with rust, it would be answering your query honestly and be the best of advice.

Rusts are fungous, and spraying to destroy the spores is the only known remedy. What we see of the rust on the surface of the leaf is the fruit of the fungi. The mycelium of the fungus is always working in the tissue of the leaves or stems. In the case of the rust on the carnation, the fruit of the fungus comes out in large spots and scatters its spores far and wide, especially by syringing, and you will remember the scare it created. A great number of remedies were advocated and much time and labor was wasted in futile attempts to exterminate it. The great remedy for rusts is to grow varieties that are resistant.

Sulphate of copper is the base of all liquid sprays for destroying rusts, and in the case of carnations and hollyhocks that seems of little use, because you can not reach the mycelium in the tissues of the host plant.

When Peter Henderson published his bright little volume, Practical Floriculture, some forty years ago, the verbenas was a very important summer-flowering plant. The writer can remember flower show premium lists that contained a prize for six or twelve pots of verbenas trained on wire frames. Mr. Henderson says the rust is caused by a minute insect which, when subjected to tobacco smoke, has the faculty of imbedding itself in the tissue of the leaf. This is contrary to what is generally believed. Rusts are the effects of fungus, but whether or not, it does not pay to be doctoring them in this twentieth century. An eminent writer thinks the rather sudden and great drop in popularity of the verbenas was mostly caused by the great improvement of the zonal geranium and its superior attraction as a bedding plant. We think rather it was because of the difficulty of wintering the verbenas.

Buy a fresh, clean stock for this spring, if you must have them, and next February sow seed from the best source you can obtain it, and you will have healthy, vigorous plants and as good colors as named varieties. W. S.

CANDYTUFT.

Can candytuft be grown in a mixed house for winter blooming? What variety is best? When should seed be sown for winter blooming? What temperature is best, and please give me points on cultivation of same? M. T. G.

The candytuft has no less than thirty species, including annuals, biennials and shrubby perennials. The annuals are best known and we suppose these are what is meant.

Candytuft can be sown in the open just as soon as the ground is dry, and will be in full bloom in six or seven weeks. But under the clouds of winter it may take ten weeks to flower.

To flower in winter is very indefinite, as our seasons have been humorously described as seven months winter and five alone. Our soil is naturally full of lime and, as we grow good asters, we must infer they like lime. I will take the liberty to ask White Bros., of Gasport, N. Y., to tell us through the REVIEW what manures they use, for they produce wonderful asters and lots of them.

Since that time we have had several notable additions to the list of Easter plants. I think the Crimson Rambler may be mentioned as the most important. It is a very valuable plant. The much heralded Baby Rambler, while valuable as a bedding rose, is not so good for Easter purposes, especially in large specimens. Dorothy Perkins, the pink rambler, is fine, and has come to stay. In the same class may be mentioned several of Mr. Walsh's new hybrid climbers, particularly Lady Gay, which is a superb thing.

A German rose called Leuchtstern, single, pink with rings of white inside and the center yellow, which I saw in New York the other day, impressed me very favorably. The foliage was fine and the blooms pretty and abundant. It seemed a good keeper, not easily shaken off.

A few other varieties of roses are fine for Easter. Chief of these are Magna Charta and Mrs. John Laing. Frau Karl Druschki promises to be a good white, although it has hardly had a fair trial yet.

Miscellaneous Plants.

In spiraeas we have had several improved varieties. The best one, all things considered, is Gladstone.

Bougainvillea Sanderiana is another very valuable Easter plant, and if the wood is properly ripened will flower most profusely in all sizes of plants from those in 4-inch pots, suitable for basket work, up to very large specimens.

Cineraria stellata, of the improved compact-growing varieties, is a very showy plant, but still capable of much further improvement by careful selection of seed from those varieties most suitable for store use.

A plant which I have not seen with the Philadelphia growers, but which is well done in New York is the boronia, which bears its globular, purplish-pink flowers in great profusion.

Another plant worthy of culture is Lilium lanceifolium rubrum and album, valuable either for cutting or pot plants; they are easily obtainable at Easter, from cold storage bulbs.

Deutzias and Others.

Another plant deserving of attention is Deutzia Lemoinei, which was tried and discarded several years ago by several of our growers as inferior to D. gracilis, but which has now proved to be valuable to several growers, particularly as to the durability of its flowers, which do not drop as easily as those of D. gracilis. The chief point in the culture is the lifting by August or before, so as to have the pots full of new roots before cold weather. This also is necessary with D. gracilis.

There has been introduced to this country this year a valuable new azalea, named for Julius Rochrs. This will undoubtedly become a leading variety. It is of the same general character as Mme. Vander Cruyssen, but of a richer, brighter color.

A good novelty this year is Marguerite-Queen Alexandra, an excellent pot plant.

Rhododendrons are now largely grown. The best new one that has come to my notice is commonly known as Red Camille de Rohan.

For the Future.

As we have had from time to time valuable additions to the list of Easter plants, so we may continue to expect them. We are promised a new pink spiraea for next year, of a lovely shade of color, for the stock of which £1,000 is reported to have been refused. Both Veitch & Sons and Sander & Son made that offer.

The growing of plants for Easter involves much extra work in the moving from house to house as the weather changes, so as to have everything just right at the one time, the compensation for this extra work being that there is generally a demand for all good plants offered at a fair price.

NO SHOW AT KANSAS CITY.

The directors of Convention Hall, Kansas City, Mo., under whose auspices all the recent flower shows in Kansas City have been held, have decided not to conduct a show this year. The show last November was accounted a brilliant success from the standpoint of a beautiful exhibition, and was also satisfactory financially, but the majority of the florists of Kansas City feel that it is not wise to attempt to give a show oftener than every other year, and hence there will not be any show at Convention Hall until November, 1907.

LOUIS W. SHOUSE, Sec'y.

AN EASTER SHOW.

At the Easter season it is the practice of practically all florists who meet the public to put their best foot forward, or, as Wm. Scott puts it, "Wash all you got and hang out all you wash." If there is any season at which it pays a retailer to make an elaborate display it is at Easter. It is a season, too, when retail stores always appear at their best because of the profusion of flowering plants.

To show what Samuel Murray, Kansas City, does in this direction, the accompanying illustrations are reproduced from photographs taken just before Easter last year. One of the pictures shows his store as one views it from the entrance. The other shows the conservatory as it appeared from the rear door of the store. An inspection of the pictures will also give an idea of the extent and character of Mr. Murray's facilities and business. Kansas City is a flower town and Mr. Murray is a florist to whom none is more ready to take advantage of the business opportunities afforded by the growth in wealth and the advance of refinement in his community.

RUST ON VERBENAS.

Will you please give us a remedy for rust on verbenas? Ours are troubled very badly with it. W. & S.

If I were to bluntly say throw away every verberna plant that is infested with rust, it would be answering your query honestly and be the best of advice.

Rusts are fungous, and spraying to destroy the spores is the only known remedy. What we see of the rust on the surface of the leaf is the fruit of the fungi. The mycelium of the fungus is always working in the tissue of the leaves or stems. In the case of the rust on the carnation, the fruit of the fungus comes out in large spots and scatters its spores far and wide, especially by syringing, and you will remember the scare it created. A great number of remedies were advocated and much time and labor was wasted in futile attempts to exterminate it. The great remedy for rusts is to grow varieties that are resistant.

Sulphate of copper is the base of all liquid sprays for destroying rusts, and in the case of carnations and hollyhocks that seems of little use, because you can not reach the mycelium in the tissues of the host plant.

When Peter Henderson published his bright little volume, Practical Floriculture, some forty years ago, the verberna was a very important summer flowering plant. The writer can remember flower show premium lists that contained a prize for six or twelve pots of verbenas trained on wire frames. Mr. Henderson says the rust is caused by a minute insect which, when subjected to tobacco smoke, has the faculty of imbedding itself in the tissue of the leaf. This is contrary to what is generally believed. Rusts are the effects of fungus, but whether or not, it does not pay to be doctoring them in this twentieth century. An eminent writer thinks the rather sudden and great drop in popularity of the verberna was mostly caused by the great improvement of the zonal geranium and its superior attraction as a bedding plant. We think rather it was because of the difficulty of wintering the verberna.

Buy a fresh, clean stock for this spring, if you must have them, and next February sow seed from the best source you can obtain it, and you will have healthy, vigorous plants and as good colors as named varieties. W. S.

CANDYTUFT.

Can candytuft be grown in a mixed house for winter blooming? What variety is best? When should seed be sown for winter blooming? What temperature is best, and please give me points on cultivation of same? M. T. G.

The candytuft has no less than thirty species, including annuals, biennials and shrubby perennials. The annuals are best known and we suppose these are what is meant.

Candytuft can be sown in the open just as soon as the ground is dry, and will be in full bloom in six or seven weeks. But under the clouds of winter it may take ten weeks to flower.

A flower in winter is very indignant, as our seasons have been humorously described as seven months winter and two months dashed bad weather. If wanted at Christmas, I should sow it about the middle of October in rows on a bench and thin out to three or four inches apart. Five inches of soil would be plenty and a temperature of 50 degrees at night would be high enough, or you can sow in flats and transplant later. About varieties, read the leading seedsmen's catalogues and choose for yourself.

Finally, we can hardly believe that candytuft would be profitable in these days in a modern greenhouse unless your grandmother willed you the greenhouse and you had free fuel. We once grew the perennial candytuft, Iberis sempervirens. It was too slow and did not pay. We once received a few plants of a candytuft from Robert Sim, of Cliftondale, the champion sweet pea grower of the world, and it was a wonder. It belongs to the annuals. We got the little seedlings somewhere early in April and planted them out one foot apart on a bench where violets had been thrown out. It was in prime order by Memorial day and had immense umbels of bloom nearly a foot across, pure white, a most beautiful thing, especially for Memorial day, and can be planted on the bed or bench after violets are thrown out at Easter time. I wish Mr. Sim would tell us about this great candytuft and advertise the seed. W. S.

A NEW JAPANESE SALAD PLANT.

David Fairchild, agricultural explorer in charge of foreign explorations, U. S. Department of Agriculture, is introducing to the American public a new vegetable that may become quite a factor in the business of those engaged in forcing winter vegetables. It is a herbaceous form of the aralia, and known under two varieties.

One variety, the Kan Udo, is raised from seed sown in heat, planted out in rows four feet apart and eighteen inches in the row, and allowed to grow until early in September, when it is cut down to the ground and the soil mounded up over the row some eighteen inches high. In forty to sixty days blanched shoots ten to twelve inches long are ready for market. This plantation is permanent and should be good for ten or more years.

The other variety, Moyashi Udo, may be of importance to the grower of vegetables under glass, as this is the variety used for winter forcing. It is grown from roots only and propagated from root cuttings. The roots are placed closely in a trench and covered and the soil mounded up. In the spring these roots are planted out and allowed to grow until the foliage is killed by the frost. They are then taken up and drainage hole in twenty-four days, but the pamphlet issued by the Department of Agriculture gives the time as forty to sixty days.

I did not use it as a salad, but cooked it, as one would asparagus, and served it in cream sauce on toast. If Scott and Rudd will try it that way they will forever eschew sauerkraut and sing a duet in its praise. W. C. EGAN.

GRAND RAPIDS LETTUCE SEED.

We notice in your issue of March 29 W. S. Croydon in writing on Grand Rapids lettuce states that he has had trouble with seed of this variety not growing properly. It has been our experience that for some reason freshly gathered seed of the Grand Rapids variety very frequently shows poor germination, but that if the same seed is kept and allowed to ripen for a few months, it readily grows 100 per cent. For our own planting, we prefer Grand Rapids lettuce seed one year old. JOHNSON & STOKES.

TROUBLE WITH LETTUCE.

We have had a great deal of trouble with our lettuce this season and suffered a loss of several hundred dollars. During our seven years' experience in raising lettuce we have never had any serious trouble. We raise Grand Rapids lettuce exclusively. Our first crop was transplanted into the houses in early fall and marketed in November and December. It was as good as usual. The second crop was transplanted into the houses as the first was marketed. It started off all right, but in about two weeks it seemed to stop growing and a decayed ring appeared around the stalk at the surface of the ground, causing the outer leaves to drop and decay. Some of the plants did not die but only threw up short leaves, lighter in color and texture than natural.

We thought at first that the diseased condition was caused by the plants having been raised out in frames, so we discarded the remainder of them and raised others in the house. The little plants grew off nicely and were transplanted into pots and flats. After they were transplanted into permanent beds they started to grow and looked like making a good crop, but after two or three weeks they commenced doing like the others. We then thought it was the soil but we have tried them on the old soil, on fresh garden soil, on benches and solid beds and on sod compost, and they all go alike.

Can you tell us what this disease is and how to combat it? If we cannot do something we are knocked out of the lettuce business. We have produced the finest of Grand Rapids lettuce for the past seven years and have never before had a failure or any serious trouble.

It has occurred to us that if such a disease can be transmitted through the seed, that might be the cause of our trouble. The plants for the first crop were produced from seed left over from last year but all our plants since that were produced from seeds bought at one time. We have procured seed from another firm and will try that.

K. & S.

The trouble you describe never has come under my notice. I don't think it is a disease in Grand Rapids but think you have struck the root of the trouble in the seed. In place of Grand Rapids

CYANIDE BURNED LETTUCE.

I have been using hydrocyanic acid gas by the formula you gave a couple of weeks ago. I used eleven crocks in three houses 29x244. Two of these houses had large lettuce nearly fit for market, the other one small plants nearly covering the ground. The following day I noticed quite an amount burnt on top. I had the houses and crops dry. Did I use too much? I notice it did not kill all the aphids on the large lettuce but nearly all on the small lettuce. Will you kindly set me right on this?

S. J. P.

I am sorry I can't help you out in this, as in all my experience with gas I never have had a sign of burning on lettuce when using the gas strong enough to destroy the aphids. The fact that you did not kill all the aphids proves that your gas was not too strong. It may have been caused from some impurity in the chemicals used.

W. S. CROYDON.

Greenhouse Heating.

FLUE TO HOT WATER.

I have a house 13x34 feet, walls four feet high, ridge nine feet. I have been heating it by means of a flue, but don't like it. Will a Winchester heater rated at 225 feet be large enough to keep 55 degrees in zero weather? Will a 2-inch flow and five 1 1/4-inch returns be enough radiation? How large a heater will be needed for a house 14x60, posts four feet, ridge nine feet, bars eight feet?

E. O. P.

The boiler in question should be amply large to supply heat for the house you mention, 13x34 feet. To heat this house to 55 degrees in zero weather will require about 175 square feet of radiation, which can be supplied by the 2-inch riser and ten 1 1/4-inch returns. Only five returns would give the plants the chills on cold nights. For the house 14x60 feet it will be necessary to provide ten 1 1/4-inch returns and a 2-inch supply. If you contemplate adding the latter house, and it is to be near the other house, it will be economy to install a boiler large enough for both houses. A heater rated at 750 to 1,000 square feet of radiation will be ample for both houses.

L. C. C.

BOILER AND PIPING.

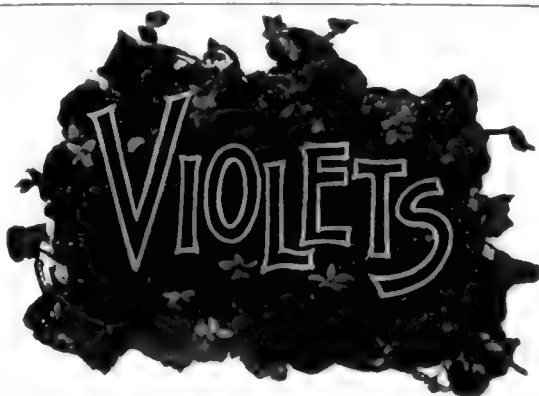

I am building four greenhouses. Three are each 19x100, side wall five feet; the other is 9x100. All four are connected. I intend running the main flow across the end of the four houses and the return across the other end of the houses. Will a 2 1/2-inch flow and return be large enough? Will six 1-inch pipes in each house be sufficient to keep 50 degrees in zero weather? All the benches are solid and one pipe will run on each side of each bed. The small house will have only four pipes. Is a steam boiler of twenty-five horse-power large enough to heat this amount of glass?

H. L. L.

Each of the houses 19x100 feet, if to be heated with steam by 1-inch pipes, should have thirteen pipes the length of the house, and the house nine feet wide should be provided with seven pipes. The main flow pipe from the boiler should be a 4-inch; a 2-inch return, however, will be ample. If hot water is used, the pipes should be increased to 2-inch; 1-inch pipe is too small for hot water in 100-foot runs. The twenty-five horse-power boiler, if of the return tube type, will be ample for the work.

GOVERNOR HERRICK VIOLET.

One of the accompanying illustrations is the portrait of H. R. Carlton, Willoughby, O., and the other is a reproduction from a photograph taken in one of his houses of Governor Herrick violets. This variety is the newest single. It originated with Mr. Carlton six years ago and was named for the then governor of Ohio. Mr. Carlton early recognized that it was one of the freest blooming violets he had ever grown, plants producing over 200 blooms in a season. He has picked steadily from this variety from October 1 to May 15, and since he has been growing it in quantity the blooms have been shipped to the Cleveland Cut Flower Co., Cleveland, where they have sold exceedingly well. The flower is deep purple, very large, borne on strong stems six to nine inches in length. The plants are vigorous and have never been affected by disease.

House of Gov. Herrick Violet at H. R. Carlton's, Willoughby, O.

This season Mr. Carlton has three houses of the variety. One is 25x160, one 20x130 and one 11x130. He has six houses in all, about 25,000 square feet of glass. In connection with his greenhouses he has a flower and seed store and does a very large retail trade.

With the Advertising Man

Advertising is salesmanship on paper. If you let this fact sink in deep, judging your advertising from the standpoint of the prospective purchaser, you will find it a great help toward success.

My last subject was handbills, and this time I want to talk about circular or form letters.

In the first place, your letters must talk to your prospective customer just as you would if face to face. Second, they must be short and right to the point—no words wasted—and be written in a happy strain, for under no circumstances is it permissible to run down anyone else.

You will find that a series of five or six letters, well written, on good stationery, using a plain white envelope with a 2-cent stamp on every one, if mailed to a selected list of people you wish to come in close contact with, will bring you surprising results.

If you will give me an idea of how many people you can reach, stating whether you have a store, or greenhouse, what class of trade you desire to get after, and such other information as would be of assistance, I will send you a series of four or five letters that I know will pull business, for they have done it for others in your line.

In the first place, your letters must talk to your prospective customer just as you would if face to face. Second, they must be short and right to the point, no words wasted, and be written in a happy strain, for under no circumstances is it permissible to run down anyone else.

You will find that a series of five or six letters, well written, on good stationery, using a plain white envelope with a 2-cent stamp on every one, if mailed to a selected list of people you wish to come in close contact with, will bring you surprising results.

If you will give me an idea of how many people you can reach, stating whether you have a store, or greenhouse, what class of trade you desire to get after, and such other information as would be of assistance, I will send you a series of four or five letters that I know will pull business, for they have done it for others in your line.

SOUTHERN FLORISTS TO MEET.

A committee of the New Orleans Horticultural Society has for some months been at work on a plan for the organization of a Southern Florists' Association. The committee consists of Paul Abele, Joseph Steckler, J. A. Newsham, C. W. Eichling and H. N. Despomier. Their work has progressed to the point where they have issued the following call:

"The New Orleans Horticultural Society, in pursuance of the intention to organize a society of southern florists, has decided to call a meeting of all the florists of the south on May 21 at Chattanooga, Tenn., for the purpose of organization.

"We have the promise of a number of representative florists to attend the meeting, and we sincerely hope you will lend your assistance by your presence and bring your friends. The benefit from such an organization cannot be overlooked and success seems assured from the present outlook.

"Due to the fact of the Saengerfest being held in Chattanooga on the above mentioned date, reduced rates will be given on all roads."

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market lacked strength all last week, because bright, warm weather brought in stock in excess of the requirements. Monday found a condition which has not prevailed on a corresponding day since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. It has been the experience that the early part of Easter week always saw a stiff market, often stiffer than the later days, due to the growers holding stock back for the extra demand. This week Monday found the market badly overstocked. Much of the material was of indifferent quality, for weather conditions have operated to take the crispness and enduring qualities out of the stock.

The principal business at the first of the week was the booking of Easter orders. These were received in fair number, and there is every assurance of large business. It is the general opinion that lilies will be in ample supply, and dealers other than those marketing the cream of the stock are reported taking orders at slight concessions from advance quotations. There will be an abundant supply of roses unless conditions have been decidedly misjudged. The general opinion is that stock will be equal to all requirements in every line, save that carnations may run a little short. This is the department in which there is least anxiety to book orders, and in fact a number of wholesalers have declined the largest orders offered them. Prices are held firmly.

Thomas Devoy.

(See Obituary Notes, published last week.)

Already the Easter violets are enroute from Rhinebeck and word has come that the shipments are large. The quality, however, is far from good. Orders have been booked at lower rates than last year and are sufficient to take up all the receipts, providing the quality upon arrival is found to meet requirements.

Greens are abundant, except smilax, which is difficult to procure.

Various Notes.

April 5 cards were received announcing the marriage of Miss Blanche Hastings and Edwin R. Kanst. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Hastings, at Owatonna, Minn., Wednesday, March 28. Mr. and Mrs. Kanst will be at home after June 15 at 6110 Drexel avenue.

The leading retailers report business quite slow the past fortnight. Many of their best customers are in New York, and some even have gone to Europe for the summer. It is likely to affect their Easter trade. Stores catering to a less wealthy class have done proportionately much better the past two weeks.

On April 7 the secretary of state licensed the incorporation of the Retail Florists' Association of Cook County, Chicago; object, mutual protection; incorporators, G. J. Walthers, Wm. H. Kidwell and Chas. Schneider. This is the organization formed about Christmas time and of which much has since been heard in connection with "red violets," "crepe chasing" and donations to charity.

Azaleas are always Wienhoeber's "long suit" for Easter. He has this year an unusually fine lot, but none of the very large plants of a few years ago. Possibly the most numerous variety is Haerensiana, the light pink double variety sent out a few years ago by Aug. Haerens, Somergem, Belgium, from whom Mr. Wienhoeber's stock came. Niobe, deep pink, is shown in quantity. Among the handsomest specimens are some naturally grown plants of the perennially popular variety, Mme. Vander Cruysen.

The Martin Grate Co. reports a number of reorders from growers who last summer installed their rocking grate; among others repeat orders from Emil Buettner and Sinner Bros. Poehlmann Bros. Co. is installing a big watertube boiler for its new glass and is fitting it with the Martin grate.

John Assa, on Bowmanville avenue, is sending the A. L. Randall Co. some very good roses. He has about 30,000 feet of well kept glass.

A Greek temporarily has taken a Dearborn street store vacated by a shoe dealer, and the window of roses and carnations bears the bold inscription, "Style and Durability."

The attendance at the club meeting tonight is likely to suffer because of the proximity of Easter.

Andrew Miller, who purloined the "roll" of Fred Keading, one of Poehlmann's growers, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to the penitentiary on Saturday.

What was said to be the largest dog in Evanston bit a young lady and then took refuge in the flower store of Fred C. Fisher. The police dislodged him and ended his career.

Edward Hickman, a grower residing on North Clark street, was attacked by thieves while riding on a Halsted street electric car Saturday night. He fought them off.

The J. B. Deamud Co. is receiving a big lot of lilies this week.

P. J. Hauswirth had the decoration for the Hamilton Club's banquet at the Auditorium Monday evening and also the apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. believes it has established a new record for the long distance shipment of lilies in pots;

DETROIT.

The Market.

Market conditions remain about the same. Everyone is anticipating a banner Easter, providing the weather man favors us. Aside from azaleas, all other stock seems plentiful. Lily plants are unusually short in the stalk. Violets are very poor.

Club Meeting.

Those members who failed to attend the last club meeting missed the banner one of the season. The main feature was an exhibition of carnations, including recent introductions. Besides about fifty vases of carnations, containing from twenty-five to fifty blooms each, the exhibits included about twenty-five vases of roses, which were certainly a credit to the growers, also snapdragons, gladioli, callas, daffodils and a fine collection of Easter plants.

I shall not endeavor to enumerate every exhibit, but will just run over such as received special mention from the judges, Frank Holznagle, August Taepke and Philip Breitmeyer.

Among the local exhibitors the largest were Breitmeyer's Sons. The carnations shown included such varieties as Cardinal, Richmond Gem, Flamingo, Eclipse and all the standard kinds very well grown. In roses they showed an elegant vase of La Detroit, also some very good Killarney, Liberty, Richmond, Chatenay and many others.

Robert Klagge, of Mt. Clemens, also made a special effort. His collection, besides many standard varieties of carnations, included some very fine seedlings. Mr. Klagge, when asked his opinion of Flamingo, said it was no good, being too slow a producer, and all the growers supported this statement.

August H. Taepke had a fine collection of carnations. He also showed some elegant plants, including Spiraea Gladstone, hydrangeas, ramblers and two fine Carl Enke azaleas.

Thos. Brown exhibited a number of carnations. A vase of Lady Bountiful and White Lawson received special mention, being the best in sight, which was saying a great deal.

A. J. Stahelin was there with his usual fine flowers, including an elegant vase of Enchantress.

Fred Pantke showed a variety of stock, including some fine peas, also an unnamed seedling carnation.

Andrew Ferguson displayed several vases of fine roses, also some good blooming plants.

B. Schroeter was on hand with a vase of his rose pink Enchantress, which spoke for itself.

Among new varieties:

F. R. Pierson sent Winsor and Variegated Lawson, both eliciting very favorable comment.

H. Weber & Sons Co. sent Jessica and My Maryland. The blooms had fine stems and calyx and My Maryland was a very clear white.

W. J. & M. S. Vesey sent a vase of Glendale, a fine, large variegated.

J. D. Thompson sent Robert Craig, which received favorable mention.

Henry Smith, of Grand Rapids, sent a collection of blooming plants.

Aug. S. Swanson sent a vase of Minnehaha roses. Despite the fact that they were ten days old they still had a pretty pink color.

A box of Kate Moulton rose arrived the morning after the meeting. It showed up very well after its long journey.

A letter from F. R. Pierson was read, speaking of the merits of Winsor and presenting the club with two elegant specimens of Nephrolepis Piersoni elegantissima which were disposed of for the benefit of the club.

August Von Boeselager showed some very fine sweet peas as well as some pansy plants. Mr. Von Boeselager also had on exhibition a model of a complete cement bench.

La Detroit cigars were indulged in during the evening.

The management and labor of the whole affair was very credibly executed by President Wm. Dilger.

At the next meeting, April 18, a discussion of "Easter Trade" will be the main subject of the evening. H. S.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The usual stiffening in prices and holding back of supplies was very noticeable on Monday. Roses have not yet made any appreciable advance, but are selling well. Best Beauties fetch $50 and from that sum down to $5. Brides and Maids have varied from $3 to $12, but will go higher toward the end of the week. Chateauf are very good and make all the way from $4 to $20, the best grade being remarkably fine. Richmond and Liberty will be in big demand and are likely to bring high prices. Some hybrids are coming from one or two growers, but these seem to be less grown each year.

Carnations of very ordinary quality make $3 to $3.50, better grades going to $5 and $6. Some advance on these prices is likely later in the week. Violets last week made 50 cents to 75 cents and in some cases very single singles made $1. This week they are a little more aggressive, doubles being 75 cents and all good singles $1. There will not be enough singles for demands, but a good supply of doubles. Easter lilies cut sell at $8 to $10 per hundred; in pots from $10 to $12. These are selling fast and we would not be surprised to see a slight shortage. Sweet peas are unusually fine. The best grades readily bring $1 per hundred. Tulips and narcissi have advanced somewhat. Good Emperor narcissi bring $2.50 per hundred. Poeticus is also in good demand. A record-breaking market at the end of the week seems assured.

Various Notes.

The pot plant display at the stores and markets is quite imposing. Nothing Shakespeare and other gladioli, which sell well.

Welch Bros.' emporium on Province street is a busy place these days. The firm is fully equipped for a record-breaking business. They are handling a tremendous quantity of pot plants in addition to their big lines of cut flowers and sundries.

James Farquhar is busy laying out and planting a fine new park at Fairhaven, Mass., to be presented to that town by H. H. Rogers, the Standard Oil magnate. He is also landscape architect for H. C. Frick's fine new estate at Prides Crossing.

Arrangements for the banquet of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on April 25 are well advanced. A first-class menu is arranged for and a bumper attendance assured. J. A. Pettigrew's lecture on April 17 will attract a big crowd to the regular club meeting. The membership will be lifted considerably above the 300 mark that evening.

E. Sutermeister, as usual, is in with a grand lot of Easter bulbous stock. His spiræas are unusually fine, the varieties Gladstone and compacta especially so.

Henry Cole, who some time ago sold out the Copeland street greenhouses, Campello, to Nicol Bros., has been appointed head gardener to Mrs. Oliver Ames, Sr., North Easton. Sabin Bolton leaves there to superintend Oakes Ames' new estate in Easton.

The Taunton Greenhouses have the finest lot of lilies and other Easter plants in their history. Last year they sold out clean and the same will be true this year. They have several thousand longiflorum lilies in prime condition.

What might easily have proved a similar catastrophe to the one recently befalling W. W. Rawson & Co. was narrowly averted at the store of R. & J. Farquhar & Co. on April 4.

John Barr is handling quantities of especially fine Fair Maid carnations at the new market. The same variety from A. Roper, its introducer, is also first-class. W. N. CRAIG.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.—Leroy Fleming was taken ill December 22 and since then has been confined the greater part of the time to his bed.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

During last week trade was reported good all over the city. Among the downtown florists there were heavy funeral orders, especially on Saturday and Sunday. The wholesalers experienced no trouble in disposing of their stock. Consignments were quite heavy all week, except white stock, which was in big demand. Plenty of sunshine and cool nights have helped quality and quantity. Lilies are fine and will be abundant, though most growers say they have orders for all they have on hand. Short-stemmed lilies are much in evidence at the commission houses. Callas, too, are plentiful, but are selling well.

The supply of Dutch bulbous stock will be apparently as large as ever. There are plenty of violets, but of poor quality, and a scarcity is looked for by Easter.

Carnations are of extra fine quality. The price is up a little on fancy stock. Enchantress is the best seller and brings the best price.

Plant trade, both retail and wholesale, is very brisk and will brace up this week in the show houses of the west-end florists. A fine assortment of blooming plants is seen. Taking things as one hears them about town, Easter trade promises to be unusually good.

Various Notes.

Charles Ford was a caller the past week.

Henry Johann, of Collinsville, reports that his broken arm is again ready for use and will now make up for lost time.

Smith & Young, of Indianapolis, are sending a fine lot of Bride and Bridesmaid to Ellis.

Nick Himmer, of Meramec Highlands, is bringing in the best violets that come to this market. He says the shading he gave them the warm days gave them better color.

C. Young & Sons Co. is making a fine show of blooming plants. Extra fine pot lilies are seen. James Young says that all departments have been kept busy of late.

The display of rhododendrons by the Grand avenue florists is large and fine, especially those at George Waldbart's.

The announcement of the marriage of M. Rice, in Philadelphia, was a complete surprise to his many St. Louis friends, who are with me in congratulating the happy couple.

Robert Windler and C. Bergerstermann, the new comers on South Grand avenue, report good trade and expect a great Easter.

The florists lost the match with the Hyde Parks last week. Ellison was in great form and so was Capt. Beyer, rolling two games over the 200 mark, Kuehn, Beneke and Schrieffer following. Tuesday the florists rolled a match with the Unions.
J. J. B.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—All of the local greenhouse firms are preparing to enlarge their plants with the opening of spring. Heller Bros. have embarked in the selling of rose plants for private gardens and are now shipping out thousands for spring planting. They go to all parts of the country.

WASHINGTON.

State of Trade.

The cut flower trade has been quiet the past week but there is considerable movement in pot plants. Easter business is a subject that will not down—until the Monday after—and preparations go merrily on. A number of the retailers have visited Philadelphia and other points in quest of bargains. Whether or not they found them, deponent saith not, but they do agree that Craig, Harris, Graham and others of the City of Brotherly Love are showing extra fine stock. The local growers have not been idle and they, too, will show up well at the finish.

Florists' Club.

The monthly meeting of the club was held April 3, in Scottish Rite hall. By a unanimous vote and amid enthusiasm the American Rose Society was invited to hold its next exhibition in Washington. President Bisset, who had recently returned from Boston, spoke in terms of the highest praise of the show staged there. F. H. Kramer also spoke in glowing terms of what he saw.

There was a general discussion of societies, clubs and shows, John Robertson, W. F. Gude and others giving free expression to their views on the best methods to promote success.

Various Notes.

The recent visit of Earl Grey and Lady Grey was the occasion for a large amount of fine decorative work. At the White House and the British and French embassies, dinners and luncheons in their honor called for large quantities of fine stock. Many flowers were furnished the embassies by Geo. H. Cooke and John Robertson.

The store of Gude Bros. Co. presents a very attractive appearance. They have stocked up with lilies and other pot plants, while a visit to their greenhouses shows that there is a large reserve.

J. R. Freeman comes out strong on lilies and large white azaleas, hydrangeas and other pot plants. Mr. Freeman has a number of azaleas that he has grown from year to year, bringing them in for Easter, till they are now real giants. He does this to please his customers and "show" the other fellows.

Z. D. and Mrs. Blackistone have been in Philadelphia, combining business and pleasure.

J. Louis Loose, of the Washington Florists' Co., is building a new house of large dimensions for general stock.

David Grillbartzer, an Alexandria, Va., neighbor to Mr. Loose, is putting up four rose houses. SCOTTY.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business has been rather dull, as is usual on the days preceding the rush before a great holiday. The feature of the market at the close of last week was the arrival of a tidal wave of southern daffodils, varying in quality from very fine down to ordinary. These flowers seemed to fall on a rather unappreciative market, the prices realized being very low for the quality. A similar flood toward the end of this week would probably realize much better prices.

The very bad weather at the opening of the week put a damper on business generally. It is, however, a good omen for the closing days, which matter very much more. Violets have been selling well right along. Indications point to a good supply for the end of this week. Valley will be very plentiful. The quality now coming in is as fine as has been seen here for some time.

The other noticeable features are the increase in the quantity of Easter lilies, the supply being large and unusually fine, and the scarcity of choice tulips. The noticeable addition to the rose list is Ulrich Brunner, from the Hugh Graham Co., at Logan, which is being distributed by several of the leading commission houses.

Visit to Becker.

Jacob Becker has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of our most successful growers of pot roses. He retains what may be considered as almost the lost art of propagating roses readily from hard-wood cuttings, and from this point up to the finished plants for Easter or for spring sales his stock is of more than usual merit. He grows a variety of the best roses, including Becker's Ideal, La France, Souvenir de Pierre Notting, Magna Charta, Franz Deegen, Ulrich Brunner, Gen. Jacqueminot, Hermosa, Gruss an Teplitz, Killarney and a number of others.

Two whole houses on his annex place at Forty-ninth and Chestnut streets are devoted to roses for spring sales. These houses now give very little trouble, the plants being potted and staked, only requiring air and water.

Besides roses, Mr. Becker grows Easter plants and some spring plants. His lilies are tall and well grown. His hydrangeas are the picture of health, admirably timed. He also has azaleas, rhododendrons and a great quantity of geraniums.

The little show house in front of his place at Fifty-second and Market streets seems destined to decide the question of the disposal of any surplus stock. Here a few well grown palms may be seen, also some experiments in valley and the nucleus of a whole house of carnations is not far off. It is with a tinge of regret that one notes these indications that may draw a fine wholesale grower into the intricacies of retail growing.

Various Notes.

Edw. Reid reports that his sales of Easter plants doubled those of last year.

John E. Haines, of South Bethlehem, has been a frequent visitor in this city with his handsome new carnations.

The street believes that A. Farenwald, of Roslyn, has finally decided to build this season.

Chas. Mecky, renowned as a grower of pot plants, will build five houses at or near Pittville this season. Mr. Mecky has sold his place and is obliged to move his greenhouses.

The new violet, Gov. Herrick, from H. R. Carlton, of Willoughby, was seen in this city for the first time last month at the Pennsylvania spring show.

Wm. J. Moore is very strong on choice sweet peas this Easter.

Berger Bros. are receiving large consignments of Richmond roses.

E. Bernheimer is handling some nice flowers of Pres. Carnot rose.

Through an error in the account of an interesting wedding last week, the fact that Mrs. Eschner and Miss Fannie Rice were among the small but select party who bade godspeed to the bridal couple in New York was inadvertently omitted.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Co. is receiving some Kaiserins that show evidence of especially good culture.

Edw. Towill, of Roslyn, is cutting heavily from two-year-old Beauties, cut back and rested after New Year's.

Victor Grossans, in charge of the Hugh Graham Co.'s plant at Logan, has been tremendously busy getting out the great quantities of azaleas, lilies, etc., grown on this place for Easter.

B. Eschner is now "at home" and is still wearing his straw hat. Looks like rushing the season somewhat.

M. Rice & Co. report that their adjustable novelty plant baskets were all sold a week before Easter. They are daily expecting more from abroad.

PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Last week was on a par with its predecessors, no change for the better or the worse, just an old-time experience of corresponding weeks before the Easter festival. Deliveries of plants for Easter have begun. Day and night this will continue up to Good Friday, when everything will be complete and the grandest display of blooming plants ever seen in New York will make its appeal to sentimental humanity.

Prices of cut flowers had no stability last week. The supply was immense. Some roses looked as if "pickling" had been premature. It had been hoped this year might be an exception to the old, suicidal system. Beauties last week seldom sold over $20 per hundred for the best, Brides and Maids at $5 and violets at from 35 cents per hundred down. Carnations held their own.

For Easter there may safely be prophesied no great increase. For Beauties a few of the very finest may bring $50 per hundred, with $40 top for the average; $15 will likely be top for Maids and Brides. Novelties in carnations are likely to reach $10 per hundred for the best, while the fancies should easily reach $5. There will be no shortage in anything; of that we may be assured.

Various Notes.

Lilies in pots hold firm at 12 cents per bud. Inferior stock has been sold at 10 cents. Enormous quantities of bulbous stock are ready. Over at Will Siebrecht's, in Astoria, house after house is crowded with them. It takes four wholesalers, in addition to his own department in the Coogan building, to dispose of them. Rebuilding is planned for the summer, with several new houses.

There seems to be no limit to Crimson Ramblers and they were never more perfectly grown. Steinhoff seems to be the Rambler king of Jersey.

Over at Prince Bay, Schmitz has a tremendous stock, both of Crimson and Baby Ramblers.

Schloss Bros. find the days insufficient for supplying the demand for ribbons.

David Clarke's Sons have a wonderful display at their big store on upper Broadway. The facilities here are none too large for the great business.

Arthur Merritt's copyrighted leucothoe wreaths are in good demand.

H. H. Berger & Co. report a large demand for their Japanese importations, especially pot-grown wistarias and double flowering cherries.

McManus has his hands full supplying orchids for Easter on orders that are reaching him from all the big cities, as well as a general local demand that cannot be neglected.

Traendly & Schenck make red roses their Easter specialty. Their Jacqs are grand.

Bonnot Bros. have a good many orders booked at the Cut Flower Exchange, for out-of-town customers.

Frank Millang's headquarters at the Coogan building are a center of life from daylight until dark these days and the whole cut flower market is a center of interest every morning now and growing more so as Easter approaches.

H. E. Froment's big store is crowded with handsome ramblers and lilies in pots.

Ford Bros. have windows brilliant with plants and a special corner for them inside.

John Young has a great display of lilies and anticipates a larger exhibition than ever before of fancy carnations from the Cottage Gardens.

The Dutchess County Violet Co. is planning for larger things another year.

Reed & Keller have added three floors and over 5,000 square feet to their property on West Twenty-fifth street, devoting one floor to manufacturing, one to glassware and the third to pottery.

Leikens had a fine luncheon decoration last week at Mrs. John Jacob Astor's, in honor of Lord and Lady Grey, of Canada. Beauties were used exclusively.

Julius Lang has a big plant display this week and is quite encouraged with the departure and likely to make it a permanent addition to his business.

Guttman & Weber report a continuous demand for Victory cuttings and say the call comes from all parts of the country.

S. Jacobs & Sons are busy with their new building. The foundations are about complete and business with them is away in advance of any year in their thirty-five years' record.

Henry A. Siebrecht lectured this week Wednesday at the American Institute rooms. His subject was "Ornamental Shrubs."

Club Meeting.

The club's rose night was very wet. Less than fifty members were present, but the exhibits and the enthusiasm were abundant. In the absence of President Scott the vice-president occupied the chair. Five new members were elected.

The trustees were authorized to negotiate with the S. A. F. with a view to holding a national flower show in New York in the spring of 1907. A long discussion as to competition for cash prizes at the meetings of the club was without result.

The death of August Rhotert was announced and a committee, Messrs. Beaulieu, Hallock and Wheeler, was appointed to draw up suitable resolutions. Similar papers were read on recent deaths in the families of club members.

The event of the evening was the paper of Benj. Dorrance, published in full elsewhere in this issue.

Robt. Simpson, president of the Rose Society, gave an interesting address concerning the Boston rose exhibition, which he termed the best rose show ever given in this country. F. R. Pierson, the vice-president, said that while the recent show was the most wonderful ever seen in America, with the joint efforts of the S. A. F., the Rose Society, and the New York Club, he did not believe Europe could equal the results that would be accomplished. Messrs. Wheeler, Birnie, Traendly, Sheridan and O'Mara discussed various phases of the subject.

Lager & Hurrell exhibited Cattleya Schröderiana in variety, the selection of 2,000 plants, for which they received honorable mention.

Nephrolepis Whitmani, exhibited by H. H. Barrows & Son, of Whitman, Mass., a splendid plant, received a certificate of merit. The same firm exhibited the new asparagus, Crawshawii, which they control, and which received honorable mention.

Miss Kate Moulton, from the Minneapolis Floral Co., showed well after its long trip and was most favorably received.

Splendid vases of Killarney, Chate-nay and Richmond came from John N. May, of Summit.

Richmond, Chate-nay and Golden Gate from Robert Simpson, of Clifton, N. J., received highest commendation.

BOUVARDIAS.

Bouvardia culture is fairly easy, once certain points are understood, one of the most important being an early start with satisfactory cuttings. These latter may consist of the young shoots taken from well-ripened cut-back plants that have been started in heat, or of root cuttings. The latter make excellent plants that grow away freely from the start. Cuttings should be struck in bottom heat when they are about three inches long, says the Gardeners' Magazine. They may be taken off either with or without a joint at the base, and root readily in a mixture of loam, leaf-mold and sand, in about equal quantities.

As soon as struck the tip of the shoot should be taken out, and from this point onward "stopping" is an important matter, so that the plant may develop from ten to a dozen breaks as early as possible in the season. Very often this stopping is neglected until the shoots are quite long, an error that lays the foundation of failure. Until the requisite number of shoots is obtained each stopping should only allow one or two, at most, pairs of leaves to form.

If for cutting purposes, then nothing can beat planting out in a cool house, where heat may be given when needed, and where the heads of the plants come pretty close to the glass. The soil either for potting or planting should be rich, light and sandy; loam and leaf-mold as the basis, and good decayed manure, with a little bone meal well worked in.

Of the bouvardias grown those named below are perhaps the best in their colors: President Cleveland may be considered the best scarlet, having taken the place of Hogarth and others. Of whites, B. Humboldtii corymbiflora, B. candidissima and B. jasminiflora are all worth growing. Vreelandi is an old favorite, which has been grown under several names, and is still one of the best. The flowers open white, and change to pink. Mrs. R. Green, when seen at its best, is a charming salmon-colored variety; Reine des Roses is an early-flowering pink. Then we have the double forms: Alfred Neuner, white, B. President Garfield, pink, and one or two others.

FAIRBANKS, ALASKA.—C. B. Sweeney proposes to erect a large commercial greenhouse. There were thirty days the past winter on which the temperature was 60 degrees below zero.

HIAWATHA, KAN.—The Hiawatha Greenhouses are being conducted by Miss S. G. Margrave. Her father, J. W. Margrave, who died January 1, aged 92 years, was for long known as the oldest active florist in the United States.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Business for the past week has been up to its old-time standard and every one in the trade is feeling good over the present state of affairs and the fine outlook for Easter and spring business. Prices are good and will be higher before the end of the present week. The Cleveland Cut Flower Co. reports business as being ahead of last year at this time, with a good demand for supplies, wirework and cut flowers.

Various Notes.

Smith & Feters have booked the largest wedding order they ever have had, to be filled the middle of this month.

C. M. Wagner was very busy with funeral orders all last week.

Milford Parks has had all he could do to fill his orders and says that his trade is growing rapidly.

Last Tuesday was a beautiful spring day and the writer could not resist the temptation to call on a few of the trade. The Bate Bros.' place on Collamer avenue, East Cleveland, was looking fine, and they will have a good cut of carnations up to July 1, and the quality is all that anyone could ask. They will have over 50,000 carnation cuttings ready for the field as soon as the weather permits planting. The three houses of maidenhair ferns are looking fine and they are cutting about 2,000 daily.

A call on H. R. Carlton, of Willoughby, O., found him busy picking violets. I should say, picking the Gov. Herrick violet. In order to appreciate this violet a person must visit Mr. Carlton and see it growing. It is certainly a fine thing, easy to grow and a very free bloomer, which means a money-maker, and that is what we are all looking for, and we think Mr. Carlton has every reason to be proud of his violet.

Carl Hagenburger, of West Mentor, was almost too busy to talk. He had been selling enormous quantities of Easter plants, of which he had a very fine lot, azaleas, rhododendrons, Easter lilies and spiræas being especially fine. Mr. Hagenburger also has stores at Painesville, Madison and Ashtabula, O.

A five minutes' walk takes one to the greenhouses of Merkle & Son, who have a very fine range of houses, several of which have been built since the writer's last visit. Everything was looking fine and the whole force was busy filling orders for Easter plants. They grew twice as many as last year, and Mr. Merkle was afraid he would not have enough to fill what orders he had already booked.

A short ride and we were at the Storrs & Harrison place in Painesville, where everybody was hustling to fill orders. It

GOVERNOR HERRICK

The New Single Violet

Did you know that the Governor Herrick Violet was the freest bloomer ever originated, and has the largest open flower borne on a stem that is heavy enough to hold the flower erect and that the color is the most intense purple of any violet, that we never have shown it to any one, whom it did not please, and that at the Philadelphia Spring Show it was awarded a certificate of merit and at the Boston Carnation Convention it received special mention, and down at Louisville, Ky., it was one of the sensations of the exhibition, and that it will please you? Write us and let us send you a description of this violet or a small bunch of the violets and then you will order some; the prices of this violet are $2.00 per doz.; $10.00 per 100 plants; $75.00 per 1000 plants. CUT IT OUT.

Advertisers are urged to cut out of their advertisements in the REVIEW any items of stock on which they are running low. Remember that the REVIEW is printed every Wednesday. Write so that your letter will be received on Tuesday, directing that items nearly sold out be omitted. Don't wait until you are completely sold out; orders will keep coming. Don't neglect it. You will be at no greater trouble to change your advertisement in the REVIEW than you will be to send back money—besides, you know how it would disappoint you to order stock and a week or so later, instead of getting the goods, have the money returned. Then, if the same stock is listed in the advertisement in the next REVIEW, what would you think? Cut it out!

ALL our replies have mentioned the REVIEW.—Goshen Floral Co., Goshen, Ind., March 17, 1906.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY
GROWING

VIOLETS

BY GEORGE SALTFOORD.

The cultural directions are clear and concise and every detail of successful growing is covered in this neatly printed, freely illustrated pamphlet of 48 pages.

It is said that this book, more than any other agency, has contributed to the wonderful expansion of the Hudson River violet industry the past three years.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at Toledo, O., June 26-28, 1906.

R. & J. FARQUHAR & Co., Boston, had a narrow escape from a disastrous fire April 4.

"SPROUTED" onion sets is the latest novelty offered in the seed sections of the department stores.

THE pea and bean growers report that arrangements for the coming season's crop are progressing favorably.

WHEN he sees timothy quoted in the papers at $2.85 a hundred the suburbanite wonders why lawn grass should be 20 cents a pound.

THE pickle men seem to be averse to buying much cucumber seed; they feel that a shortening up of the crop will be to their advantage.

SOME enterprising seedsmen who have had alfalfa and clover tested by the Department of Agriculture, are advertising "Purity and Germination Guaranteed by the Government."

ALL the onion set growers say they will cut down their acreage this year. They are at liberty to change their minds, however, and may do so before the sowing season is over.

THE receipts of clover seeds at the port of New York last week were 2,489 bags, valued in invoices at $57,083; other grass seeds, seventeen bags, valued at $113; other seeds valued at $3,799.

SEASONABLE weather is reported from all sections where planting is usually done at this time of the year and normal conditions as to operation and the amount of seed going into the ground is the rule.

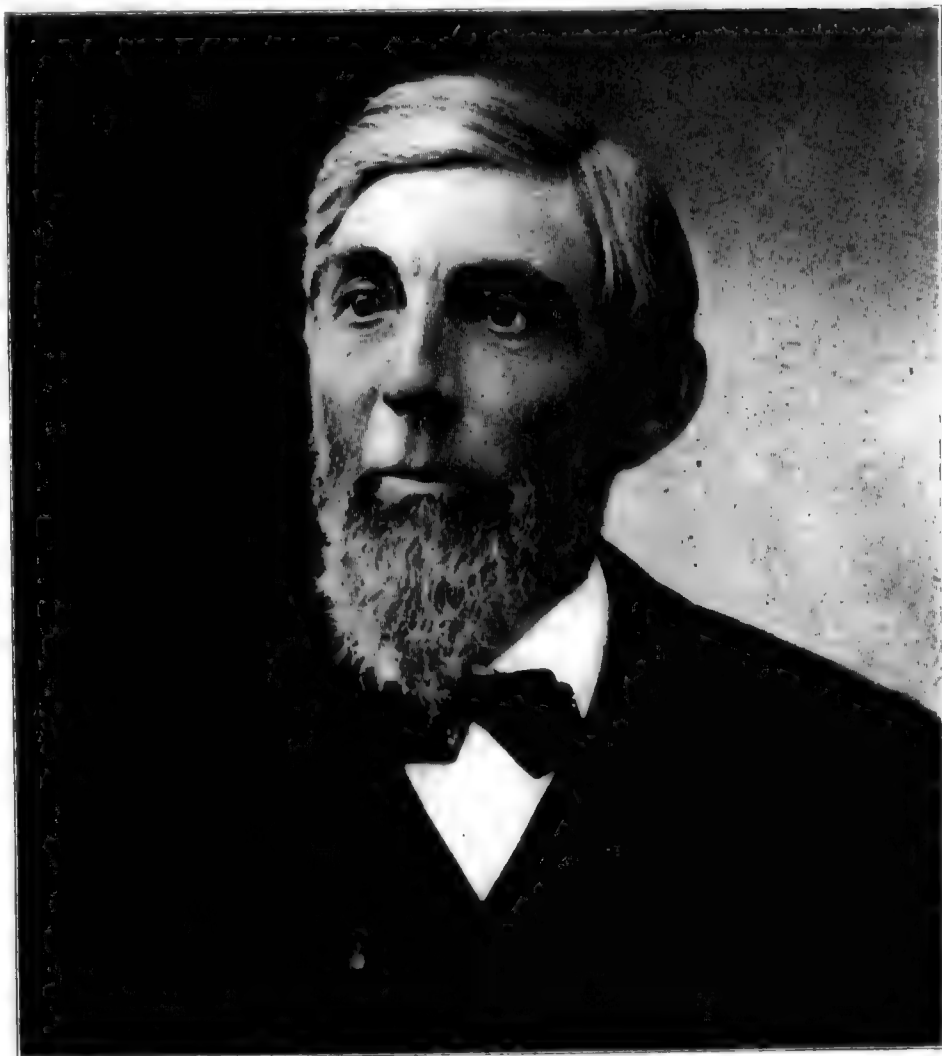

THE seedsman has much to buck against; the Agricultural Department and many agriculturists outside of the department think lightly of his integrity and scoff at his efforts to excel in his line.

THE market gardener seems to be the only user of seeds who appreciates the improvements that seedsmen make from time to time in their stocks. He knows the value of an article and pays accordingly.

COUNTER trade is reported to be on with a rush; mail orders have taken another spurt; "fill in" business is said to be good with the jobbers and onion sets are being cleaned out rapidly. What more do you want?

T. G. RAYNOR, of the seed branch of the Canadian Department of Agriculture, says that the Seed Control Act of 1905 has resulted in a marked improvement in the general quality of the seed offered for sale in the Dominion.

SEEDSMEN express no little surprise at the confidence the rural population places in the new seed departments of the big general mail order houses. It should not be overlooked, nor the value under-estimated of the fact that these houses have built their wonderful successes on the one idea of securing and keeping each customer's confidence.

Stiles D. Woodruff.

THE sign, "Tested Seed Potatoes," may be something of a joke, but the Chicago man who has it out in front of his South Water street store says it is a winner.

C. C. MORSE & Co., San Francisco, report that on the whole prospects are very favorable, although the season is backward and it is impossible to say just how things will develop within the next few weeks.

FREE SEED LETTERS.

The Post Office Department says that the cost in handling the free seed distribution is about $35,000 a year. This season it has an offset; there is a profit in carrying first-class matter, and the seedsmen have worked up a good increase in congressmen's mail. Here is what Frederick W. Kelsey, New York, wrote to his acquaintances in Congress, including members of the committee on appropriations:

Although not especially interested in the seed business, I am somewhat conversant with its general conditions and desire to express my appreciation of the action of the House Committee on Agriculture in eliminating from the general appropriation bill the item for common free seed distribution.

Of all the antiquated perpetuated governmental absurdities of the present day, this scheme of paternalized patronage at national expense has apparently reached the limit, and I believe that its discontinuance will be regarded as wise legislation by the great majority of the people all over the country.

DEATH OF AUGUST RHOTERT.

August Rhotert, the well known New York wholesaler and importer of seeds and plants, died suddenly on Monday, April 9, at his residence, 235 West One Hundred and Thirty-first street, New York City. He was 45 years of age.

Mr. Rhotert was a man of exceptional business ability. He was very exact and painstaking in all his operations and enjoyed an enviable reputation for promptness and business integrity. He had amassed a fortune as a result of his operations in the trade and through well considered outside investments.

Mr. Rhotert established his seed and plant business in 1893. In thirteen years it has become undoubtedly the largest of its kind in this country. Among the firms which it was his good fortune to represent, and which were equally fortunate in their selection of an American agent, were Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., the great Paris seed house; The Haerens Co., Somergem, Belgium; Louis Leroy, Angers, France; E. Neubert, Wandsbek, Germany; John Palmer & Sons, Annan, Scotland; H. M. Hardy-zar, Boskoop; P. J. Looymans & Sons, Oudenbosch; The General Bulb Co., Vogelzang; G. H. Richards, London, and several others of the oldest and largest in Europe.

Mr. Rhotert is survived by a widow, his mother and two brothers in Germany. The business will be conducted by the estate.

DEATH OF S. D. WOODRUFF.

Stiles D. Woodruff, senior member of the firm of S. D. Woodruff & Sons, Orange, Conn., died on the morning of Wednesday, April 11, at the age of 68 years. Mr. Woodruff had been ill for nearly a year with rheumatism of the heart. His wife passed away March 8 and at that time Mr. Woodruff was so low that he could not be told of the event. His funeral will be held from the family home at Orange on Friday, April 13.

Stiles D. Woodruff was one of the pioneers in the seed growing industry in the United States. Until the beginning of his fatal illness he had always been an exceedingly active man, with a very wide acquaintance in the trade.

Mr. Woodruff began seed growing in 1865, upon his return from the civil war. The first seed crops grown were turnip, beet, parsnip, cabbage and sweet corn. The ruling price for the first few years for turnip, beet and parsnip to the trade was 40 cents per pound, cabbage $3 per pound and sweet corn $3 per bushel.

Mr. Woodruff in his early days took up market gardening and his records show some fabulous prices for vegetables. Everything was sold in a wholesale way, cabbage bringing $25 per hundred heads, sweet corn $5 per hundred ears, tomatoes $3 per bushel and Lima beans $3 per bushel.

In recent years Mr. Woodruff confined his business to growing seeds for the wholesale trade and in 1892 the present partnership was formed by taking in his two sons, Frank C. and Watson S. Woodruff. The firm has been progressive and kept pace with the remarkable strides that are general throughout the seed trade. Where pounds and quarts were handled years ago hundreds of pounds and hundreds of bushels are handled now.

The firm made a specialty of garden seeds in variety, growing extensively on its own farms such seeds as beet, carrot, parsnip, turnip, onion, tomato, sweet corn, etc., and also made a specialty of Maine seed potatoes and onion sets. Their seedpotato business in particular has grown to very large proportions. They have seedpotato storehouses in Aroostook county, Maine, and have recently leased a large house at Queens, Long Island, where a liberal stock will be carried in addition to their places of business at Orange, Conn., and New York city, where they have a store at 82 Dey street. The business will be carried on as usual by the sons, upon whom the management has devolved for some time.

Mr. Woodruff held many positions of trust. He had twice represented his town in the legislature. Besides the two sons associated with him in business he leaves another son, Robert J., prosecuting attorney for the common pleas court of New Haven county, and one daughter, Mary.

SIDE LINES.

One may make his bread and butter from a close attention to a given stock, and it isn't wise to have so many irons in the fire that the main feature of the business is obscured or neglected; but a little honey to go with the staff of life easily can be made out of closely related side lines—if you think more of your back, or your wife's, than you do of your stomach, you can call the easy money "velvet." Many retail florists make a good thing out of odd pieces of pottery, a few of which are kept constantly on hand. For the man with the bedding trade, and especially the one with much cemetery work, there is an opportunity in iron reservoir vases, lawn settees, etc. The Stewart Iron Works, Cincinnati, who make a large line of this class of goods, say that several hundred florists and seedsmen, scattered in all parts of the country, are handling their goods to advantage. Most of them carry only a few pieces as samples, but others more favorably located for this class of trade carry considerable stock. There is usually a good margin in it because of lack of competition.

BEGONIA FOR NAME.

I enclose a leaf of a begonia and would thank you to let me know if it is a leaf of Begonia Gloire de Sceaux? G. E. W.

We do not think the leaf sent is Gloire de Sceaux, for although we have not seen a plant of this variety for some years, it is described botanically as "leaves thick, heavy, underside red." It looks very much like incarnata, not one of its improved forms, of which there are at least two, but the old, original incarnata. It is not necessarily a species at all, for the begonia family has been crossed, not only between varieties and species, but between sections, and many new types have been produced and innumerable varieties, especially among the shrubby or fibrous-rooted sections. To this crossing we owe the introduction of several of the finest things in the genus, notably Gloire de Lorraine, which came from B. Socotrana x Dregei. We think the leaf sent is B. incarnata.

A GOOD TABLE PLANT.

Cissus discolor is acknowledged to be one of the prettiest creepers available for stove culture, and it is also sometimes met with trained on a large balloon. But I do not think many know, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, how pretty a table plant it makes. When pruning old specimens in February or March some of the stouter wood should be saved and made into cuttings a few inches long. Each cutting should have three eyes, one to be inserted under the soil, and two to remain above it. These cuttings should be placed, four together, in a 3-inch pot at equal distances near the edge and stood in a propagating case. Growths will soon start, eight in all, from the eyes, and they should be carefully retained. Before they become unmanageably long, the specimen should be shifted entire into 4-inch or 6-inch pots. At this stage, three light bamboo canes should be evenly split in halves, and the ends so inserted in the pots as to form a low balloon; or four stakes may be arranged in the form of a pyramid. In either case, the shoots should be tied in to cover the sticks, and, if well attended to, some excellent room or table plants will be formed by August, and they will last in beauty for many weeks.

STEAMER SAILINGS.

The European travel already has set in and after Easter it will be on in full force. It will pay you to post steamer sailings in your window this summer as a reminder to your patrons. It would be a good idea to mail a neat card to your good trade calling attention to the fact that you can deliver flowers on board steamer at New York or elsewhere at brief notice. Here are the principal sailings in the next fortnight:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Having a desire to see what the florists of the Magic City are doing, I visited a number of the most up-to-date and largest plants, and spent a most delightful week among as progressive a bunch of florists as there is to be found anywhere in this country.

My first call was upon Hugh Seales, at Schillinger Station, where I was welcomed by one of the most cordial sons of Ireland that ever lived. Mr. Seales has a place of twelve acres and 22,000 feet of glass, kept in first-class order. There are two houses of Brides and Maids, one of Golden Gate, one of Beauty, all in excellent condition, showing great skill in Mr. Seales' method of rose culture. Several houses of carnations, one of smilax and plumosus, several houses of lilies, spiraea, bulbous stock, etc., for the Easter trade, were also in grand shape. A crew of able assistants were very busy getting everything ready for the Easter rush. Mr. Seales has a store at 109 North Twentieth street, where I found A. S. Sawyer in charge, doing a splendid business.

My next visit was to J. Parker's new establishment at Fairview Station. C. Zbinden is manager here and is preparing to build the largest plant in the state. They have 20,000 feet of glass up and another 20,000 feet under way. Stock here was in very good condition. Roses and carnations are as fine as can be grown, thousands of fine breaks from the bottom coming in just right for Easter. A great variety of bedding plants are in excellent condition. Mr.

Parker also has a store at First avenue and Twenty-first street, in charge of Miss Nettie Zbinden, where I was most pleasantly entertained for an hour or more. Miss Zbinden reports business everything that could be wished.

George Currey, 221 North Nineteenth street, also reports business very brisk. Mr. Currey has a handsomely equipped store and had on display a handsome collection of palms, ferns, bedding plants, cut flowers, etc. Mr. Currey and several assistants were busy waiting on the trade, and only having time to get in a few words edgeways, I left to visit Wm. M. Lindsay, at City Hall building, 317 North Nineteenth street, where I was received with true southern hospitality. Mr. Lindsay has the most handsomely equipped store in the city, and reports business very good. Mr. Lindsay also has a greenhouse plant at Woodlawn, which was visited and found in very good condition. Carnations were especially well grown here. Decorative stock, ferns, bedding plants, etc., were also fine and show that Mr. Lindsay is right up to snuff in the business.

I also met Mr. Williamson, who is doing wonders in beautifying the fine homes at the Highlands and other parts of the city. I would have liked very much to visit several other growers on the outskirts, but being so handsomely entertained by the ones visited, and my week's vacation having come to an end, I regretfully said good-bye.

A. J. KOENIG.

NEW ORLEANS

Business is not as brisk as could be expected at this time of the year. Last winter was very mild and many plants have endured in the ground and do not need to be replaced. The different markets are well supplied with all sorts of flowering and foliage plants. Several department stores on Canal street are selling plants. What effect this will have on the trade is to be found out later, but it will certainly be against the florists who have stores in town.

Auction sales, also, which seem to have more reason to exist in larger markets than New Orleans, are held here at short intervals. They may bring a few cash dollars for the surplus stock of some growers, but they have a tendency to lower the prices and overstock the market.

The season is not over by any means, and no doubt every florist will dispose of his stock.

M. M. L.

PEORIA, ILL.—Joseph M. Cole is now in charge at J. C. Murray's Main street store.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The new crimson canna, Mrs. W. F. Kasting, is likely to be very widely used within the next year or two if it does as well everywhere as it did at the St. Louis world's fair, where it was awarded a gold medal. All the canna specialists have bought stock of it and it is being shipped to growers all over the country.

PACIFIC COAST.

OUR small advertisement in the REVIEW has brought us several good sized orders for seeds.—CORONADO NURSERIES, Coronado, Cal.

PORTLAND, ORE.—J. J. Butzer says that everybody is as busy as can be, seeding, lawn making and outdoor planting being in full blast the first week in April. This will be his banner season, three times as heavy as last year. He recently shipped an order to Japan for seeds amounting to $500.

CLOSE OF NURSERY SEASON.

With the arrival of the middle of April the Pacific coast nurserymen are practically at the end of the planting season. From reports from our largest nurseries, it has not been an especially profitable one, principally on account of the long continued rains in the late winter and early spring, together with an almost entire absence of cold weather at its proper season.

The rains were very late in coming last fall, and when they did start they continued almost without intermission for about eight weeks. Between the showers a few warm spells started deciduous stock budding almost before the last season's dry leaves had fallen, and when it was possible to dig at all, in most cases the planters had become disgusted waiting for suitable weather for planting and concluded to defer everything for another year.

This fact does not make much difference with ornamental shrubbery, but where the stock in question was in the line of fruit or deciduous shade trees, another season added to the present growth in many instances makes the trees too large to handle with safety or for good after-results.

The dealers handling fruit trees exclusively had a rough deal, as in a majority of cases there was a good demand for trees, but the planters absolutely could not get their ground in order before the trees had budded too much to handle.

The spring trade for small stock promises well, but only a limited number of dealers here devote much space to its growth, preferring rather to cater to the planters of hardy outside shrubbery and trees.

The season with the wholesale flower growers has been fair. Better prices would probably have prevailed if the weather had been such as to make inside stock scarce, but when it is taken into consideration that we have only had half a dozen frosty nights in a year, it makes the production of flowers comparatively easy. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is fair, although nothing to brag about, and stock of all kinds is plentiful. It is a pleasure to be able to remark that the retailers can get all the stock in the rose line that they require. Carnations are to be had in any quantity and stock has dropped just a little in price, although it may stiffen somewhat again before Easter.

Regarding Easter trade, I have spoken with quite a few of the dealers here and there seems to be a general idea that there will be a shortage in out-of-town orders this season. As for the local demand, from all appearances it will be up to the usual standard.

Regarding stock, I can say there will be plenty of everything as far as present indications go. Lilies are of good quality and supply, and potted plants cost the dealers from $5 to $7.50 per dozen. Azaleas, white wistarias, genistas, white lilac and dwarf fruit trees in blossom will be extensively used. Azaleas are not very plentiful, our early warm weather forcing them into bloom in March, but some fine specimens of later sorts are seen and bring good prices.

Violets are practically out of season. Also all kinds of bulbous stock except a few late daffodils and valley.

Various Notes.

Wm. G. Meyer, one of San Francisco's pioneer florists, died in Alameda March 30. Mr. Meyer was 74 years of age and retired from active business several years ago. He was well known by all the gardening fraternity, having lived in the vicinity for over forty years.

A. Ringier, of W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, is in town.

J. D. Brady, of Gill's Floral Depot, Oakland, has returned from a three weeks' visit to Chicago.

Chas. M. Robinson, landscape gardener, of Rochester, N. Y., has returned from Honolulu and is stopping for a few days at the Palace hotel.

Miss Solomon, the decorator, had the big Elsey wedding decoration in Oakland.

Louis Nelson, employed at Golden Gate park, was killed by the falling of the big windmill near the Ocean shore drive. Mr. Nelson was 46 years of age and married.

Chas. Abraham, of the Western Nurseries, reports a good spring trade in all lines of flowering stock.

L. D. Carter has purchased two acres of ground near San Leandro and will shortly commence the erection of four greenhouses. G.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June 13-15, 1906.

THE Fredonia grapevine growers report a very active season, with some varieties running short.

SWAIN NELSON & SONS Co. proposes to extend its landscape department. In addition to the Chicago office they recently opened one in Pittsburg.

THE United States Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin, written by Hermann von Schrenk, discussing "The Wrapping of Apple Grafts and Its Relation to the Crown Gall Disease."

THE Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., is planting a collection of evergreens as a show ground for customers.

THE imports of trees and plants at the port of New York last week were valued at $30,739 in consular invoices.

THE nurserymen of the Pacific northwest are closing a very prosperous season. The increase in population is very rapid, fruit growing is having a rapid development and there has been hardly a day the past winter on which nursery stock could not be dug or planted.

It is stated that in the winters of 1900 to 1904 from 2,000,000 to 2,500,000 peach trees were planted annually in Texas, but that the past season not over 250,000 were planted. A bulletin of the Texas Agricultural Station says that the decrease is due to the loss on earlier plantings, in itself caused by lack of knowledge or neglect of the proper methods of cultivation.

MANY southwestern orchardists are following a method of planting peach trees believed to have originated a number of years ago with W. T. Wilson, Nacogdoches, Tex. He spaces twenty feet apart each way and every six trees in the field form a hexagon, with a seventh tree in the center. The rose growers under glass call this diagonal planting "staggering." At twenty feet apart it gives 126 trees to the acre.

LILACS are budded on the California privet in greater quantities each year.

THE Georgia peach orchards had a remarkably heavy bloom this year, and although considerable damage was done by the cold snap in March in most localities the trees have set enough fruit for a profitable crop.

HARLAN P. KELSEY says of Stenanthium robustum, the mountain feather fleece, that "this remarkable hardy perennial is, without doubt, one of our best new introductions, and may be classed with the showiest of all herbaceous plants. As the buds begin to unfold they are quite upright, and of a light green tinge, gradually becoming whiter until at last they burst forth into a veritable snowbank of drooping, fleecy bloom of purest white, the panicles often two to three feet long. After several weeks the flowers, as they ripen, turn to shades of pink and purple. It is a vigorous perennial, attaining a height of from five to eight feet, and is abso-lately hardy throughout the United States and Canada. The mountain feather fleece is of easy cultivation, and if given plenty of food, makes a wonderful show, equaled by few plants of any description."

THE railroads are assisting the nursery agents in the development of the Ozark fruit region. The 1906 peach crop, if profitable prices are realized, will give the work an appreciable boost.

FOR the Dallas meeting of the American Association of Nurserymen a round-trip rate of $15 from St. Louis has been secured, and it is proposed to consolidate as many parties as possible and travel by special train.

THE Fred Wellhouse nursery, near Leavenworth, Kan., lost twenty acres of young stock April 2, through a fire which swept over several square miles in that locality and also did much damage to the Wellhouse orchards.

THE demand for conifers is larger this season than in any other spring. Since it has been learned that these trees may be moved with safety, the public is asking for the better kinds in constantly increasing numbers. The leading nurseries now grow seedling conifers by the million.

MAKING BORDEAUX MIXTURE.

Where only a small quantity of Bordeaux mixture is required—from a bucketful to a barrel—a method described by B. T. Galloway gives excellent results. The formula is four pounds bluestone, five pounds lime to fifty gallons of water. Two half-barrel tubs are made by sawing a barrel through the middle. One tub is used for the bluestone solution and the other for the milk of lime, and each tub should contain twenty-three to twenty-five gallons. One man dips the bluestone solution with a bucket and pours it into a whole barrel or other vessel, and another man simultaneously dips up and pours in bucketfuls of the milk of lime. The lime solution should be kept well stirred.

In preparing very small quantities of Bordeaux mixture, buckets or similar vessels may be substituted for the half barrel tubs. It is possible for a single operator to dip a bucketful of the bluestone solution and then a bucketful of milk of lime and pour them together into a vessel. It is usually preferable to have a bucketful or so of water in the receptacle into which the solutions are to be poured, but this is not essential.

The better and quicker way of making up Bordeaux mixture by the barrel consists in placing the two half-barrel tubs on an elevated platform and then, by means of hose or spigots, allowing the two solutions to flow together into a barrel.

No matter what quantity of mixture is to be made up, it is necessary to strain the materials through a wire strainer. The best type of strainer is made of brass wire, with eighteen or twenty meshes to the inch. If all the copper solution is strained and then the milk of lime is strained into the dilution vessel, it will not be necessary to strain the

DISCUSS SCHOOL GARDENS.

Conferences of the Municipal Museum of Chicago, relating to school gardens and kindred subjects have been held at the rooms of the museum in the Public Library building. The school gardens of Chicago were discussed from the standpoints of "What Has Been Done," and "Practical Possibilities." O. T. The photographs used in illustration of home and school gardens are still on exhibition in the museum and may be seen by visitors.

The Market.

The past week trade has improved very much, owing to the fine weather we are having. In March we had twenty-one days without sun, and thirty inches of snow fell in the month; so you can see how much the pleasant days are welcomed. It looks like a great Easter, and the craft is all ready for it with a big lot of good stock.

Florists' Club.

April 3 the club held its first meeting for the month at its old rooms in Iroquois hall, as a permanent new location, which will be more central, has not yet been found. President Stevens was in the chair, and all the other officers, as well as a very large attendance of members, were present. Our members are very much exercised because the Board of Education has refused to allow the penny packets of seeds to be distributed to the school children. A committee consisting of McKellar, Woodrow and Faxon will meet the board in a few days, when explanations will be in order. M. B. Faxon and C. P. Bethards were elected active members. There was discussion of plans for the coming chrysanthemum show, and horticulture in the schools. Adjournment was to Tuesday evening, April 17.

Various Notes.

Candidates for membership on the bowling team met Thursday evening, April 5, for practice at the Y. M. C. A. alleys. The S. A. F. will hear from us at Dayton.

The Franklin Park Floral Co. has some fine lilies.

The Richmond rose is growing in favor here; dealers and customers alike speak well of it.

The Livingston Seed Co. had a special sale of Philadelphia and Crimson Ramblers, last Saturday. As the plants were large and in full bloom they went like wildfire at $1.00 to $1.50 each.

Monday, April 2, brought all our florists a lot of good orders for the closing session of the general assembly. More flowers than ever before were used at the capital.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Current Comment.

During the past week the weather has been more to the florists' liking. We have been favored with plenty of sunshine and a springtime atmosphere. The conditions being more favorable, the late Easter stuff stands some chance of getting in on time. The different stores show by their displays that Easter is at hand and all look forward to a large business. The market is well supplied with bulbous stock. There is also a good supply of roses and sweet peas may be had in quantity.

Geo. B. Wiegand has just returned from a trip to Chicago.

A visit to the many greenhouses around the city finds all busy getting their bedding stock in shape. There seems to be plenty of all kinds, and the quality fine.

The Club Exhibition.

Our spring show was held April 9 and the weather was anything but favorable. There was a good attendance, the display was creditable and the quality of the cut blooms was extra. The E. G. Hill Co. staged some fine roses and won out in all classes, Baur & Smith doing likewise in the carnation classes. H. W. Rieman and E. Hukriede & Son carried all before them in the plant display. H. Schilling had a pair of as fine spiraeas as could be found anywhere. His azaleas were also fine. Smith & Young Co. showed fine violets. G. Teilmann, of Marion, had an exhibit of roses. W. J. & M. S. Vesey, of Ft. Wayne, exhibited a fine lot of Glendale that attracted much attention. S.

WHITEHALL, MICH.—C. M. Davidson has joined William E. Pew, bringing an extensive experience in the nursery line and in growing vegetables. The trade in plants and cut flowers is increasing steadily and the outlook for business in the nursery department is very encouraging. The firm name will be W. E. Pew & Co.

Some People have taken our advice as published in these columns recently and are buying My Maryland for trial. We reiterate here—if it succeeds with you as it does with us, it will prove the best white carnation you ever grew. Despite the variety's apparent failure in several places, we strongly advise all growers to give it a trial. We have been frank about its faults as developed in other places. We doubt if these will develop in many places.

Jessica we believe, will succeed generally and will prove to be the best red and white variegated ever disseminated. Few varieties show as strong constitution as this one does and it is a wonderful producer. Extra fine stock of both varieties ready now. R. C., $2.50 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. CINCINNATI.

The Market.

At this writing we are in the midst of the quiet before the storm. Business is very much on the slow side. The supply of stock is small also, but this is a good thing. Moderately warm weather with bright sunshine has aided materially in bringing out the Easter cut. The supply of carnations will be much heavier on this account and roses also will be helped along. Bulbous flowers have never looked better. Thus the prospects for a fine Easter business this year are of the best.

The retail florists are looking forward to a fine plant trade and by way of encouraging it are making beautiful window displays of all varieties of pot plants.

From the wholesale district comes the report that advance orders have never been larger. There is a heavy call from out of town which will insure a large shipping trade.

Various Notes.

Matt Fels, of Collinsville, died during the past week. He was well known among the local craft, having been a stand-holder in the flower market. He was advanced in years and had been ailing for some time.

The wedding of Miss Belscher and Ross Brooks took place at the Church of Advent at Walnut Hills last Tuesday. Both parties are well known in florists' circles in this city. Miss Belscher has for a number of years been associated with Chas. Jones in the Walnut Hills Floral Bazaar. The wedding was a quiet one.

C. J. OHMER.

OLNEYVILLE, R. I.—James Crawshaw has a new asparagus to which he has given the name Asparagus plumosus Crawshawii. It was well thought of when exhibited at the Boston spring show, receiving honorable mention.

POT MAKERS FOR 140 YEARS
A. H. HEWS & Co. Inc. CAMBRIDGE, MASS.
KIND OF FLORIST

NORTHERN TEXAS.

Current Comment.

Carnations are being planted in the field nearly a month later, I am told, than last year. The continuous wet weather has made it impossible for some to plant, especially those living in the black land district. The planting of shrubbery has ceased, it being too late for that class of plants. Geraniums, antirrhinums, verbenas and that class of stock are being planted extensively.

Carnations are looking well, considering the past gloomy weather, and a good Easter crop is assured. Some of our florists will be forced to buy Harrisii, as the unusual warm weather made it impossible to hold them. All bulbous stock is off for this year. Next year will see a much larger amount of such stock planted. Calla lilies, so far as I have ascertained, are a failure this year. Azaleas have profited by the warm weather and are now in full bloom.

This state is a peculiar one in many respects. One must become established here to do anything. Everyone, although not necessarily from Missouri, must be shown. Square dealing, truthful representation of stock, coupled with the faculty of delivering promptly, will carry the day in time. But if a dealer misrepresent anything, or show an inclination to charge excessive prices, he may as well pack up.

Sweet alyssum and carnations are the staple crops in winter here. Without these we would have to rely upon shipped stock. Next year we hope to have other flowers to fill in.

Mr. Munson, of Denison, was at Sherman last week, visiting the florists there. He reports business increasing to the extent that he will be forced to remodel his establishment soon. Mr. Munson being located on the territory line, draws an immense business from that section, which is increasing each year.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, of the Texas Nursery Co., was forced to throw out some of his carnations to make room for a new stock of roses and bedding plants.

The sympathy of this section is extended to J. S. Kerr, of Sherman, on the death of his son Murray, who died from injuries received in a mine accident at Butte, Mont. Mr. Kerr was a young man of promise and his early death is greatly deplored. Robert Kerr, of Houston, attended the funeral of his cousin at Sherman.

INSECTICIDES.

Haslam's Insect Powder, an infallible insecticide. Destroys insects injurious to house and garden plants, shrubs, trees, vines, potatoes, melons, cabbage, currants, and vegetables and fruits of all kinds.

This preparation, though poisonous to insects, does not injure the foliage. It is used either by dusting or in water by spraying. Also destroys lice on fowls, cattle and dogs. Kills green fly on roses and other flowers, insects on quinces and pears. Insects that fly like flea beetles and rose bugs are more difficult to contend against than are caterpillars or slugs. Look often and dust or sprinkle when necessary.

Put up in 1-lb. boxes at 25c; 5 boxes for $1.00. Special prices in bulk.
Haslam Chemical Co., 118 Cliff St., Scranton, Pa.

Haslam's Lime Flour. For disinfecting, also for mixing with Paris green for dusting squab lofts and poultry houses. Sprinkle it freely about stables, kennels, cow sheds, pig sties, poultry houses, rabbit hutches, farm-yards, market places, factories, urinals, ash bins, etc. For disinfecting walls, ceilings, cattle trucks, and slaughter-houses, make the powder into a wash or milk by admixture with water and apply it in that form.

This is the purest and has the most strength of any lime made. Sure death to vermin and insects and superior to chloride of lime. No odor. Put up in bulk at 10c per lb.
Haslam Chemical Co., Works foot of Cliff St., Scranton, Pa.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

The florists of Elmira were greatly surprised to receive word that Supt. J. J. Curran had severed his connection with the United States Cut Flower Co. Mr. Curran is very popular among those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance, and the news of his resignation has caused much regret in town. The employees of the U. S. Cut Flower Co. presented him with a beautiful silver smoker's outfit, including a fine meerschau pipe. W. R. Compton, the president of the company, acted as chairman at the presentation, and spoke very highly of Mr. Curran, and ably expressed the sentiments of all present.

Mr. Curran did not disclose his plans with regard to his future movements, but wherever he may go, it is certain that he will carry with him the best wishes of all with whom he has associated in Elmira.

There will be a considerable increase in glass here this spring. Fred La France contemplates adding 10,000 feet to his plant, to be devoted exclusively to carnations. The United States Cut Flower Co. is discussing the advisability of erecting another 100,000 feet next month.

Business is fairly good and Easter finds the growers well prepared to meet the demand. J. E. S.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular meeting and display of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held April 6. The usual exhibition of the season's flowers from well-known hands was made, about equally between competitors for the society's prizes and not for competition. Among the latter were the choicest orchids from the houses of Lager & Hurrell and Julius Roehrs Co.

James Kelly was elected to membership and Louis Piker placed in nomination.

The topic for the evening was "The English Landscape," portrayed by colored lantern slides by A. C. Bode, of the Orange Camera Club, with explanatory notes by the secretary. Jos. A. Manda appeared for the first time since his illness. J. B. D.

LENOX, MASS.

The regular meeting of the Lenox Horticultural Society was held April 7, President S. Carlquist in the chair. The principal topic of the evening was "Potatoes." An offer of $25 was received from A. T. Boddington and one of $18 from Vaughan to be used for prizes at our chrysanthemum show. W. J. & M. S. Vesey, Fort Wayne, Ind., were awarded a first-class certificate for an excellent vase of Carnation Glendale. G. F.

PEOPLE who know a good thing when they see it, and will take advantage of the same, must be possessed with good judgment and are generally successful. CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

W. Wells, of England, offers gold, silver gilt and silver medals for six varieties of chrysanthemums, two of each, on 12-inch stems. The following are eligible: Mrs. H. Partridge, Mrs. D. Willis James, Merstham Crimson, Mary Ann Pockett, Beatrice May, T. Richardson, Mrs. Heaume, E. J. Brooks, Mrs. F. F. Thompson, Mrs. W. Knox, Mrs. J. E. Dunn and Miss May Seddon.

A prize of $50, $25 and $10 is offered for twelve blooms on 24-inch stems, for the best American seedling or sport, the color to be white, pink or yellow, the name to be given by the donor of the prize.
DAVID FRASER, Sec'y.

THE READERS' CORNER.Coloring Carnations.

We note the inquiry of R. E. W. in last week's REVIEW, and while we agree with the editor's sentiments regarding the coloring of flowers to a certain extent, we know, too, that one cannot always govern the demand, and if colored carnations are wanted we must try to please our customers. We have found that green aniline is used for coloring carnations green, for Pat's day, and suppose blue and yellow aniline would do the same work. A nickel's worth of aniline will make about a pint of coloring. Use in vase. It takes about six hours for flowers to take up enough coloring.
KABER.

Ants and Moles.

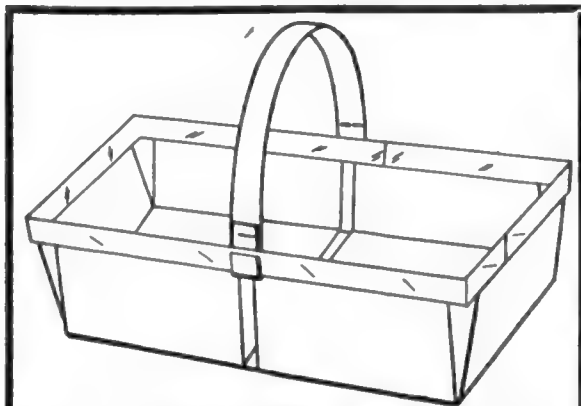

My remedy for ants is a little camphor gum broken up and placed in the hills. In a few hours the ants will have abandoned their home.

For moles I pour a little kerosene in the runway, or a little bisulphide of carbon will drive them out. Don't take a light near either.
R. E. W.
